PREFACE

THE third and last volume, which brings this collection down to the end of the Athenian Age, was to have included, following Bergk's example, the Anacreontea, and to have ended with an Appendix of New Fragments published too late to be printed in the earlier volumes. The volume's unusual length, caused among other things by the difficulty of estimating the amount of material available, has made it necessary to transfer the Anacreontea to a forthcoming volume containing the Greek Elegiac and Iambic Poets, and to withhold the New Fragments for the present. For this change I must apologise to my readers. There is this, however, to be said, that by postponing the printing of the New Fragments till a reprint of the earlier volumes is called for—and I understand that this will not be very long—I shall be able to print them nearer to their proper places, and meanwhile most of my new 'restorations' will be found in the Proceedings of the Cambridge Philological Society next spring.

The Account of Greek Lyric Poetry has worked out longer than I expected, but having written it I find I cannot cut it down without changing its character. It is intended to be rather more than a catalogue, which would have been unnecessary, and a good deal less than a history, which would have gone beyond the scope of this Series. I hope its discussion of origins, without which any adequate account of the subject would be impossible, will not be thought out of place. Its position is unusual, but I do not regret it. Like many so-called introductions it will read, as it was written, the better for being taken last.

Many new readings will be found in Bacchylides, Timotheus, and Philoxenus. They have nowhere, I think, been preferred to those of earlier editors without good reason, generally palaeographical. Those of Bacchylides come of long study of the British Museum Papyri, in the chief of which a large number of the accepted readings were found inconsistent either with the length of the gap or with the possible reading of doubtful letters. The new readings of the Persae, which are mostly due to the filling of gaps not previously attempted, are based on the facsimile and confirmed by the autopsy of Dr. Schubart. With the Banquet there was still much for ordinary emendation to do; I have thought it sufficient here to avail myself of the published accounts of the MSS.

My thanks are due to the Egypt Exploration Society for permission to include the two Encomia of Bacchylides, to Messrs. H. J. M. Milne and H. I. Bell of the British Museum and to Dr. Schubart of the Berlin Museum for their expert help with the Papyri, to Professor A. S. Hunt for access to new material and permission to print it, to Mr. A. D. Knox for several valuable suggestions, particularly with regard to the metre, on the Banquet of Philoxenus, to Dr. A. B. Cook and Mr. H. Rackham for giving me the benefit of their criticism of the Epilogue, to the general editors of the Series for dealing kindly with a sometimes refractory contributor, and to the staffs of the publisher and printer for giving satisfactory presentment to many pages particularly troublesome to set up.

PREFACE

In a recent review of a similar collection of fragments, it was objected that the compilers of such books do not follow some accepted numeration, such as that of the Teubner series. In this book it was impossible. New discoveries had made both Bergk and Hiller-Crusius out of date, and the edition of Diehl, even if it was to contain all the fragments and notices gathered in these volumes, had not been completely published. I hope that the numeration-tables will do something to ease the difficulty of tracing old favourites to their new homes.

LYRIC POEMS

Plutarch Greek Questions: 'Who is the hero Eunostus at Tanagra, and what is the origin of the custom which forbids women to set foot in his sacred grove?'—Elieus, the son of Cephisus and Scias, had a son Eunostus, who is said to have taken his name from a nymph Eunosta who brought him up. Though an honourable character was combined in him with good looks, he was an austere man, and the story goes that when one of his cousins the daughters of Colonus, a maiden named Ochna, fell in love with him and tried to win him, he rejected her suit with contumely and went off to lodge a complaint with her brothers. But she was before him, and made the like accusation of him, urging her brothers Echemus, Leon, and Bucolus to slay him for having forced her. Whereupon they set an ambush and slew the poor boy, and shortly after were taken prisoners for it by Elieus. Repenting her crime and torn between a lover's remorse and a sister's pity, Ochna now told Elieus the whole truth, and Elieus taking it to Colonus, Colonus gave his judgment, and the brothers fled the country and their sister threw herself down a precipice. Such is the account given by the poetess Myrtis of Anthedon. Thus came the shrine and grove of Eunostus to be forbidden ground to women, and indeed it often happened, in time of earthquake, famine, or other portent, that the citizens of Tanagra made careful enquiry whether a woman had not inadvertently approached the spot.

CORINNA

LIFE

Suidas Lexicon: Corinna:—Daughter of Achelodorus and Hippocrateia, of Thebes or of Tanagra; pupil of Myrtis; [nicknamed Myia 'Fly';] a lyric poetess. It is said that she was victorious five times over Pindar. She wrote five Books, and Inscriptions, and Lyric Nomes.

Plutarch Glory of Athens: When Pindar was as yet young, and prided himself overmuch on his command of language, Corinna censured his ill-taste because, though myths are the proper work of a poet, and forms of words, turns of phrase, changes of expression, tunes and rhythms mere embellishments, his poems were nevertheless devoid of them. Pindar took strong objection to her words and proceeded to compose the lyric which begins: 'Ismenus, or gold-distaffed Melia, or Cadmus, or the holy race of the Sown, or the doughty might of Heracles, or the cheerful worship of Dionysus . . .'<sup>1</sup> and showed it Corinna. Whereupon she retorted, laughing, that he should sow with the hand and not with the whole sack. For Pindar had simply made mixed drinks of his myths and then poured them into his song.

Scholiast on Aristophanes Acharnians: Ἀγοράζειν:—to behave in the market-place with arrogance of manner and licence of speech; an Attic use of the word, for using which in Book I of his Maiden-Songs Corinna takes Pindar to task.

Aelian Historical Miscellanies: When the poet Pindar competed at Thebes he happened on ignorant judges, and was defeated five times by Corinna. By way of exposing their lack of good taste, he called Corinna a sow.<sup>1</sup>

Pausanias Description of Greece: Corinna, the only poet of Tanagra, is commemorated by a monument in the open street and by a painting in the gymnasium. The latter represents her in the act of putting on the headband she won when she defeated Pindar in the lyric competition at Thebes. In my opinion her victory may be set down first to her dialect, because she did not sing like Pindar in Doric, but in a dialect which Aeolians would understand, and secondly because, if one may really judge from the portrait, she was at that time a remarkably good-looking woman.<sup>2</sup>

Introduction to Pindar: The names of the aforesaid lyric poets are these:—Alcman, Alcaeus, Sappho, Stesichorus, Ibycus, Anacreon, Simonides, Bacchylides and Pindar; [some authorities add to these Corinna].<sup>3</sup>

CORINNA

Parthenius Love Romances [on Aëro]: The story goes that Aero was the daughter of Oenopion and the nymph Helicè, and Orion the son of Hyrieus, falling in love with her, asked her of Oenopion in marriage, and for her sake reclaimed the island (of Chios) by purging it of the wild beasts that infested it; moreover he drove off large herds of cattle from the neighbouring farms to be her bridal gift. Oenopion, however, had no stomach for such a son-in-law, and whenever the day was fixed deferred it, till one night, fuddled with drink, Orion broke into the chamber where the girl lay asleep; whereupon Oenopion laid violent hands upon him and put out his eyes with a firebrand.

by their mother, being taught the art of weaving by Athena and given personal beauty by Aphroditè. When Aonia<sup>1</sup> was sore bested with a famine and the inhabitants were dying in great numbers, messengers sent to consult the Apollo of Gortyn<sup>2</sup> were told to 'propitiate the two Gods of Aid'; their wrath would be appeased 'if maidens two' consented to be sacrificed to 'deities twain.'<sup>3</sup> The oracle found no maiden of the city willing to obey it, till a bondwoman brought word of it away to the daughters of Orion. No sooner had she told them as they stood at the loom, than they accepted death for their neighbours' sake rather than death by the plague, and crying thrice to the Gods below that they were a willing sacrifice, smote themselves with the shuttle beneath the chin, severed the vein of the throat, and fell both of them dead. In pity of them Persephonè and Hades made the maidens' bodies to disappear, and raised up from out of the earth in the stead of them two stars, which appeared and rose into the sky, and men called them comets. And at Orchomenus in Boeotia all the Aonians built a shrine in remembrance of the maidens, whither every year boys and girls bring them offerings, and to this day they are known to the Aeolians as the Coronaeae or Shuttle-Maidens.<sup>4</sup>

Scholiast on the Odyssey: The account of Demetrius of Phalerum is as follows:—Menelaüs came to Delphi with Odysseus and consulted the God about the coming Trojan War, and it was then that the eight-yearly Pythian festival was held by Creon, and the victor was the Laconian Demodocus, a pupil of Automedes of Mycenae, who was the first to write in epic verse of the battle of Amphitryon with the Teleboans and the fight between the Cithaeron and Helicon who gave their names to the mountains in Boeotia.

From a Papyrus of the 2nd Century (after 11 mutilated lines containing well-crowned, on the summit, strings [of the lyre], mountains, tribe, race):

‘ . . . and the [goats] brought gifts of holy [food], and gave it him unbeknown to crooked-counselled Cronus in the days after divine Rhea had deceived him <sup>1</sup> and won great honour of the Immortals.’ So sang Cithaeron, and forthwith the Muses bade the Gods put their secret ballot-stones in the golden urns, and all at once they rose, and the more part of the votes was Cithaeron’s. And quickly did Hermes’ loud cry proclaim that he had won delightful victory, and the Gods adorned his head with wreaths,<sup>2</sup> and his heart was glad. But Helicon, he was whelmed with bitter griefs, and tare out a smooth rock, and good son Hermes. For them did Love and Cypris persuade to go secretly to thy house and take thy daughters nine.<sup>1</sup> And they in good time shall bear thee a race of demigod heroes, and be fruitful mothers of children. Learn thou both the things thou didst ask of the oracular tripod, and how it is I learnt them. This honour have I of fifty mighty kinsmen, the share allotted Acraephen<sup>2</sup> in the holy sanctuary as forthteller of the truth.

For the son of Leto gave the right of speaking oracles from his tripods first unto Euonymus; and Hyrieus<sup>3</sup> it was who cast him out of the land and held the honour second after him, Hyrieus son of Poseidon; and my sire Orion took his land to himself and had it next, and now dwells in heaven—that is his portion of honour. Hence comes it that I know and tell the truth oracular. And as for thee, my friend, yield thou to the Immortals and set thy mind free from tumult, wife's father to the Gods.

Etymologicum Magnum : In Charixena's time :— Charixena was an out-of-date fluteplayer and musical composer, and according to some authorities a lyric poet ; compare Theopompus in the Sirens :

Plutarch Music: Among those of his own age Aristoxenus declares that it fell to the lot of Telesias of Thebes to be educated in his youth in the best music, and to learn the works of famous artists, particularly of Pindar, Dionysius of Thebes, Lamprus, Pratinas, and the rest, in fact all of the lyric poets who were good composers of music.<sup>1</sup>

Plato Menexenus [SOCRATES and MENEXENUS]: MEN. Whom do you mean? surely Aspasia, don't you?—Soc. Yes, I do, and Connus son of Metrobius. These are my two teachers, Aspasia of rhetoric and Connus of music. No wonder that a man can speak with such an education. Yet even a man who was not so well educated, but who owed his music to Lamprus and his rhetoric to Antiphon of Rhamnus, would be able to win himself fame by eulogising Athenians at Athens.

LIVES OF DIONYSIUS, LAMPRUS, PRATINAS

The Same : Sophocles had not only been a handsome youth but had been taught dancing and music in his childhood by Lamprus.

Suidas Lexicon : Pratinas :—Son of Pyrrhonides, or according to some authorities, of Encomius, of Phlius, a tragic poet. He competed against Aeschylus and Choerilus in the 70th Olympiad (B.C. 500–497) and was the first writer of Satyric drama. It was during the performance of one of his plays that the wooden platforms on which the audience stood gave way, and thereafter the Athenians built themselves a theatre. He exhibited fifty dramas in all, thirty-two of which were Satyric. He was victorious once.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on dancing] : It is said that the old poets Thespis, Pratinas, Phrynichus were called dancers because they not only made their plays a matter of choric dancing but actually taught dancing generally, apart from their own dramas.

Introduction to Aeschylus Seven against Thebes : The play was produced in the archonship of Theagenides in the 78th Olympiad (B.C. 468). Aeschylus won with the Laius, the Oedipus, the Seven Against Thebes, and the satyr-play Sphinx. The second prize fell to Aristias with the Perseus, the Tantalus, the Antaeus, and a satyr-play of his father Pratinas, the Wrestlers.

1

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on flutes]: According to Pratinas<sup>1</sup> of Phlius, at a time when hired flute-players and chorus-dancers occupied the orchestras, some anger was aroused<sup>1</sup> because the flute-playing was not an accompaniment to the singing of the choruses as of old, but the singing of the choruses an accompaniment to the flute-playing. Pratinas' feeling in the matter is shown by the following Hyporcheme or Dance-Song:

What clamour is this, what measures are here?
What outrage is befallen on the patter-circled altar Dionysiac? To me belongs Bromius, to me. It is I that should sing, it is I that should ring, as I speed me o'er the hills with the Naiads like a swan that makes his motley-feathered tune. Song's the queen Muse hath made; the flute, he must dance second as becometh a servant; let him captain the revels if he will, the fist-to-fist door-battery of the tipsy and the young. Beat O beat him that breathes the breath of a speckled toad!<sup>2</sup> To the flames with this reedy spender of spittle, bawler of bibble-babble, counter-runner unto time and unto tune, this hire-

2

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: Now of all the Greeks none preserved the art of music more jealously than the Spartans; they practised it very generally, and lyric poets were numerous among them. Even to this day they keep the ancient songs with the greatest care and are real connoisseurs of them. And thus it is that we find Pratinas saying:

the cricket of Sparta so apt at the dance<sup>3</sup>

DIAGORAS

LIFE

Aristophanes Frogs: XANTHIAS to DIONYSUS: Here we are, sir; the initiates he told us of are at their games hereabouts. They're singing the Iacchus which they sing through the market-place.<sup>1</sup>

Scholiast on the passage: Diagoras was an atheist lyric poet who like Socrates introduced new deities. According to Aristarchus, Aristophanes does not introduce Diagoras here singing of the Gods, but uses the word 'singing' ironically for 'jeering at,' 'putting to scorn.' So the poet is inciting the Athenians, who accordingly condemned Diagoras on the charge of blasphemy, and offered the reward of a talent to any who should put him to death, and two talents to any who should take him alive, calling upon the Pellonians to do one or the other. Compare Craterus in his Collection of the Decrees. This Diagoras was a Melian, the son of Teleclytus, and belongs to the time of Simonides and Pindar. According to other commentators, among them Apollodorus of Tarsus, the reading is δι' ἀγορᾶς 'through the marketplace,' etc.

The Same Birds: CHORUS: On this day of all days there's proclamation made that whoever of you Athenians shall kill Diagoras the Melian, shall re-have been substituted as a joke, if it was not a corruption due to the same cause ceive a talent, and whoever shall kill one of the dead tyrants, a talent; and we want to do the same here. Whoever shall kill Philocrates the Struthian shall receive a talent, and whoever shall bring him alive, four talents, etc.

Scholiast on the passage: Diagoras of Melos: This man after the capture of Melos came to live at Athens, and disparaged the Mysteries, with the result that many of the citizens were unwilling to be initiated. Accordingly the Athenians, as we are told by Melanthius in his tract On the Mysteries, made this proclamation against him and inscribed it on a bronze tablet.

Aristophanes Clouds: STREPSIADES and PHEIDIPIDES: S. Vortex is king; he has turned out Zeus.—P. Bah! what nonsense!—S. You may take it it's true.—P. Who says so?—S. Socrates of Melos.

Scholiasts on the passage: Of Melos:—Not literally, for Socrates was an Athenian. But because Diagoras, who was a Melian, was attacked for opposing the Gods, and Socrates is now attacked by the poet for atheism, Aristophanes calls Socrates a Melian. (2) Diagoras of Melos, who after a friend had betrayed his trust, turned atheist, which so enraged the Athenians that they maltreated Melos. (3) Diagoras was a blasphemer, of Melos (cf. 3 below). According to another account Diagoras was a teacher of Socrates.

LIFE OF DIAGORAS

Hesychius of Miletus On Famous Men : Diagoras son of Telecleides, when a slave, was observed by Democritus of Abdera to be a promising fellow, and, bought by him for ten thousand drachmas,<sup>1</sup> became his pupil. He devoted himself to lyric poetry. He was nicknamed the Atheist because, when a fellow-poet, whom he accused of taking a Paean he had written, swore that he had not stolen it and then won distinction by having it performed as his own, he wrote in his vexation the prose-work known as The Tower of Defence to mark his repudiation of his religious beliefs.

Suidas Lexicon : Diagoras :—Son of Telecleides or of Teleclytus, of Melos, philosopher and writer of songs . . . ; he comes in point of time after Pindar and Bacchylides but before Melanippides, and flourished therefore in the 78th Olympiad (B.C. 468–465).<sup>2</sup>

Diodorus of Sicily Historical Library : While these events were taking place,<sup>3</sup> Diagoras nicknamed the Atheist fled from Attica under a false accusation of impiety and in fear of his life, and the Athenian people put the price of a talent of silver<sup>4</sup> on his head.

[Lysias] Against Andocides : The impiety of the defendant is so far greater than that of Diagoras of Melos, in that Diagoras' offence was one of words, and was committed in respect of foreign rites and festivals, whereas the defendant's is of deeds, and committed in respect of the rites and festivals of his native city.

LIFE OF DIAGORAS

Cicero On the Nature of the Gods: But it sometimes will happen that good men make a good end. Such examples we take up eagerly and attribute them quite irrationally to the immortal Gods. Yet when at Samothrace<sup>1</sup> a friend once asked Diagoras the Atheist if a man like him, who believed that the Gods took no thought for the affairs of man, did not observe what numbers, to judge by the multitude of paintings dedicated, had escaped by their vows the violence of the weather and come safe to harbour, he replied, ‘The reason of it is that there are no paintings to record the poor fellows who made shipwreck and were drowned.’<sup>2</sup> In a storm at sea the same philosopher, in answer to his frightened fellow-passengers who were saying that it served them right for allowing him to travel aboard the same ship, pointed to the numerous other vessels labouring on the same course, and asked them whether they thought that Diagoras was aboard those as well as this. So true is it that what we are or how we behave ourselves has nothing to do with the colour of our fortune.

Tatian Against the Greeks: Diagoras was an Athenian, but when he made mock of the Mysteries at Athens you punished him, and when his Phrygian Discourses came into your hands you forthwith hated us.

Aelian Historical Miscellanies: I understand that Mantinea was remarkable for the excellence of its constitution, which was not surpassed by that of Locri nor of Crete, nor even of Sparta—nor yet, I may add, of Athens; for the work of Solon was a noble achievement in spite of the gradual destruction of certain of his laws by his countrymen in after days. Nicodorus the boxer had already become the most famous citizen of Mantinea, when with advancing years he left the ring and became his city's lawgiver, thus serving his country in far nobler fashion than by being proclaimed victor in the arena. His fellow-lawgiver is said to have been Diagoras of Melos, whose favourite he was. More might be said here of Nicodorus, but I refrain lest I should seem to plagiarise the encomium<sup>1</sup> of Diagoras, an abandoned wretch of whom I have no wish to make further mention.

Philodemus On Piety: Those philosophers do not believe in Gods of human shape, but in Airs and Breaths and Ethers, so that for my part I should not hesitate to say that their wickedness surpassed that of Diagoras. ## BACCHYLIDES

LIFE

Strabo Geography: Ceos had originally four cities, but now has two, Iulis and Carthaea, with which the others were combined, Poieëssa with Carthaea and Coresia with Iulis. Iulis was the birthplace of the lyric poet Simonides and of his nephew Bacchylides,<sup>1</sup> and later of the physician Erasistratus and the Peripatetic philosopher Ariston. There appears to have been a law here, mentioned by Menander in the lines 'The Cean custom takes my fancy still, | The man who can't live well shall not live ill,' whereby in order to make the supplies go round, all citizens who reached the age of sixty should drink the hemlock.<sup>2</sup>

Plutarch Exile: The ancients, too, it seems, wrote the finest and most famous of their works with the aid of Exile. Thucydides the Athenian composed his history of the war between the Peloponnese and Athens near Scaptè Hylè in Thrace, Xenophon wrote at Scyllus in Elis . . ., the poet Bacchylides in the Peloponnese.

Eusebius Chronicle: Olympiad 78. 3 (B.C. 466): Flourished Bacchylides and Diagoras the atheist.<sup>3</sup>

LIFE OF BACCHYLIDES

Etymologicum Magnum: Meidylus: the name of the father of Bacchylides, and it is derived from μείδιω 'to smile' as Pheidylus from φειδῶ 'thrift.'

Scholiast on Pindar ['skilled is the man who knoweth much by nature; they that have but learnt—even as a pair of crows, gluttonous in their wordiness, these chatter vain things against the divine bird of Zeus']: (a) This is directed against Bacchylides, who had in a way become a competitor in the same arena. (b) He is hinting at Bacchylides and Simonides, calling himself an eagle and his rivals crows.

The Same ['the eagle is swift among winged things, and though he chase it from afar he quickly taketh his quarry all bloody in his claws; but the chattering daws have a lower pasturage']: That is, my rivals in art resemble jackdaws, only shrieking and feeding at lower levels, and cannot rise to the heights. He appears to be directing this at Bacchylides, with whom he had a feud, and compares himself to an eagle and Bacchylides to a jackdaw.

The Same ['but I must shun the overmuch biting of slander']: He is hinting at Bacchylides, who was always traducing him to Hiero.

The Same ['“Pretty,” say the children to an ape, “pretty thing,” but Rhadamanthus, etc.']: (a) According to some authorities this is directed against Bacchylides, who was in high repute with Hiero. . . . (b) It may be intended thus: Bacchylides appears in the eyes of children a man of skill, but not in the eyes of grown men.

LIFE OF BACCHYLIDES

The Same ['longing for more than they can get,<sup>1</sup> they do wound their own selves instead of obtaining their heart's desire']: The reference again is to Bacchylides. This is taken to be the meaning owing to Bacchylides' poems being preferred by Hiero.

[Longinus] On the Sublime: Again, take lyric verse; would you sooner be Bacchylides than Pindar? or take tragedy; would you sooner be Ion of Chios than the great Sophocles? Bacchylides and Ion may be faultless, may have attained to complete mastery of the polished style, whereas there are times when Pindar and Sophocles carry all before them like a conflagration, though they often flicker down quite unaccountably and come to an unhappy fall. Yet surely no man in his senses would rate all the plays of Ion put together at so high a figure as the Oedipus.

Ammonius Words alike but different: The Nereïds are not the same as the Daughters of Nereus. Compare Didymus in his Commentary on the Victory-Songs of Bacchylides, where he says in an explanation: 'Some authorities declare that the Nereïds are not the same as the Daughters of Nereus, the latter being his true daughters by Doris and the former receiving the more general name of Nereïds because they came of other mothers.'<sup>2</sup>

Porphyrion on an Ode of Horace [Pastor cum traheret]: In this ode he imitates Bacchylides, who makes Cassandra foretell the future events of the Trojan War as Horace here makes Nereus.<sup>3</sup>

that in 12 he read Daughters of Nereus at l. 102 and Nereïds at l. 38, though the latter is probably not what Bacchylides wrote and 12 is a dithyramb <sup>3</sup> cf. 16 below

Menander On Declamations: Odes of Farewell are addressed to Gods on their departure, supposed or real,<sup>2</sup> to visit some other haunt. For instance, the Delians and Milesians have what they call Departures of Apollo, and the Argives of Artemis, and there are Farewell Odes of this kind in Bacchylides.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on drinking-cups]: Later they were made of earthenware and silver on the pattern of the wooden ones. The first of these to be made, or to become famous, were the Boeotian cups as they are called, having been first used by Heracles on his warlike expeditions; hence their alternative name with some people, Heracleotic, though indeed these differ from the others in having on their handles what is known as the chain of Heracles. The Boeotian type is mentioned by Bacchylides where he addresses the Dioscuri, summoning them to a holy feast:<sup>3</sup>

No carcase of beef is here, nor gold, nor purple carpets, but a kindly spirit, a sweet Muse, and delicious wine in Boeotian cups.

Next in repute to these came the Rhodian, made by Damocrates, and third the Syracusan.

speeding through the wide city for to gather the companies of the Trojans into the market, even to the place of mustering. And their loud summons ran everywhere about, and men put up their hands and besought the immortal Gods to give them stay of their troubles.

O Muse, who was it began the righteous plea? 'Twas Pleisthenid Menelaüs, and he spake in suasive accents learnt of the fair-robed Graces: 'Ye warriors of Troy, 'tis not through act of high-ruling Zeus who seeth all things, that great woe cometh to man; rather may every man attain, if he will, unto unerring Justice that goeth servant of Orderliness the pure and Right the wise; and happy they whose children give her a home. But unabashed Presumptuousness,<sup>1</sup> who thriveth on shifty gains and lawless follies, and bestoweth so swiftly on a man wealth and power that be not his, only to send him anon to deep ruin, she it was who destroyed those overweening sons of Earth, the Giants.'

THE YOUNG MEN AND MAIDENS OF THESEUS

Lo a blue-prowed ship clave the Cretan main with Theseus staunch-i'-the din aboard and twice seven splendid youths and maids<sup>3</sup> of race Ionian, for northern breezes fell on her far-gleaming canvas by grace of Athena of the warring aegis. And Minos' heart was pricked by the fell gifts of the love-crowned Dame of Cyprus, till he could no more hold off his hand from a maid but touched her fair white cheeks. Then loud cried Eriboea upon the brazen-cuissèd seed of Pandion,<sup>4</sup> and Theseus saw, and his eye rolled dark 'neath his brows, and a cruel pang pieced to his heart, and 'Son of peerless Zeus' quoth he, 'now guidest thou no righteous spirit in thy breast. Stay I pray thee, hero, thy presumptuous violence. Whate'er resistless Fate hath decreed us from on high and the scale of Right inclineth to, we shall fulfil our destiny, I doubt not, when it comes; prithee restrain thy grievous intent meanwhile. True it may be that thou art the peerless offspring of the bed Zeus shared beneath Ida's brow with Phoenix' modest maiden so fair of fame;<sup>1</sup> yet I also come of the wedding of rich Pittheus' daughter<sup>2</sup> unto Poseidon of the sea, when the violet-crowned daughters of Nereus gave her a veil of gold. Therefore I bid thee, O war-lord of Cnosus, restrain a presumptuousness that would bring much woe; for I would not my eyes should look on the sweet light of the immortal Dawn after thou hadst done despite to any of this youthful band. Sooner will I show the strength of my arms beside yours, and God shall decide the rest.'

He ended, and the other's spirit bent not back, but he took his stand upon the firm poop and leapt, and the precinct of the deep received him right kindly. And the heart of the son of Zeus was amazed within him, and he bade them keep the cunningly-wrought ship before the wind. But Destiny struck out another path.

The bark sped on amain, urged from astern by the North-Wind's breath, and all the tribe of Athenian youth were affrighted when the hero leapt into the sea, and shed tears from their lily eyes<sup>1</sup> to think of the woeful hap that needs must be. Meanwhile that sea-people the dolphins bore great Theseus full swiftly to the abode of his father the Lord of steeds,<sup>2</sup> and he came into the hall of the Gods. only have a Latin name; I therefore give the traditional translation (cf. 'Lent-lily' = wild daffodil); but we may compare the Pheasant-eye Narcissus of our gardens, a native of the Mediterranean region, which is sometimes called the Narcissus of the Poets; the translation is justified as an adjective by its use by English writers from Spenser to Tennyson; if the Pheasant-eye is intended here, the pupil of the human eye is meant to correspond to the coloured centre, and the white to the white petals; the word is given its original use as an adjective, cf. Pind. N. 7. 79 λείριον ἄνθεμον; λείρός (Hesych. ὁ ἰσχνὸς καὶ ὠχρός, 'thin and pale,') and λειροφθαλμός (Suid. ὁ προσηνεὺς ἔχων τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς, 'with gentle eyes') may or may not be connected; perhaps also ληροί (Hesych. τὰ περὶ τοῖς γυναικείοις χιτῶσι, 'the gold piping of women's smocks'); Boisacq favours the view that λείριον is borrowed from Egyptian, comparing the Coptic ρηρι = flower; the meaning is 'bright young eyes,' cf. King of holy Athens, lord of the soft-living Ionians, what new thing means the war-song that cries from the brazen-belled clarion? Doth a captain of enemies beset<sup>2</sup> the bounds of our land? or thieves of ill intent drive our herds of sheep perforce in their keepers' despite? or what is it pricks thy heart? Prithee speak; for thou, methinks, if any man, hast aid of valiant youths to thy hand, O son of Pandion and Creüsa.—

A messenger is but now come running, by way of the long road of Isthmus, with news of the deeds ineffable of a mighty man,<sup>3</sup> who hath slain the huge Sinis that o'erpassed the world in strength, child of the Earth-shaker Lytaean,<sup>4</sup> the son of Cronus, and hath laid low the man-slaying sow in the woods of Cremmyon, aye, and the wicked Sciron,<sup>5</sup> and hath ended the wrestling-place of Cereyon,<sup>6</sup> and Poly-

Who and whence saith he that this man is, and what his equipage? Comes he with a great host under arms, or travelleth alone with his servants like a merchant<sup>2</sup> that wanders abroad, this man so mighty, stout, and valiant, who hath stayed the great strength of so many? Sure a God must speed him for to bring the unjust to justice, for it is no light task to come off ever free of ill. All things end in the long run of time.—

Two alone, he saith, are with him, and there is slung to his bright shoulders a sword of ivory haft, and either hand hath a polished javelin; a well-wrought Spartan bonnet is about his ruddy locks, and a purple shirt around his breast, with a cloak of the frieze of Thessaly; and as for his eyes, there goes a red flash from them as of Lemnian flame;<sup>3</sup> a lad is he first come to manhood, bent on the pastimes of Ares, war and the battle-din of bronze; and his quest is unto splendour-loving Athens.

FOR THE ATHENIANS

There's full many a path of immortal verse for him that is dowered of the Pierian Muses, and hath his songs clothed in honour by those violet-eyed bringers of the wreath, the Graces. So weave, I pray thee, for delightful blessed Athens a passing fine strain, thou Cean fantasy that hast won such fame.<sup>1</sup> Dowered as art thou of Calliopè so exceeding well, the path thou choosest should indeed be noble.

Once on a day the counsels of wide-mightied noble Zeus sent a-fleeing from Argos that land of steeds the golden heifer that was the rose-fingered daughter of Inachus,<sup>2</sup> when gold-robed Hera, Lady most high, had bidden that Argus who looked all ways with tireless eyes to keep ward sleepless and unresting on the fair-horned maid, and the Son of Maia<sup>3</sup> could not elude him either by radiant day or pure and holy night. Whether it came to pass that the fleet-

Scholiast on Pindar ['to make him cease from roofing Poseidon's temple with the skulls of strangers']: The poet is peculiar in ascribing the roofing of Poseidon's temple with the skulls of defeated strangers to Antaeus; the story is told of the Thracian Diomedes; but Bacchylides relates that Euenus did this with the suitors of Marpessa, and Sophocles ascribes the like to Oenomaüs.

[PHILOCTETES]

Scholiast on Pindar ['from Lemnos']: This account tallies with that of Bacchylides in the Dithyrambs in making the Greeks fetch Philoctetes from Lemnos at the prophetic bidding of Helenus. It seems that it was fated that Ilium should not be taken without the bow of Heracles.

VICTORY-SONGS

29 (i) A-E

FOR ARGEIUS OF CEOS, VICTOR IN THE BOYS' BOXING-MATCH AT THE ISTHMUS <sup>2</sup>

The first part of this Ode seems to have contained an invocation to the Muses and an address to Corinth as the seat of the Isthmian Festival, and passed on to the story of Minos and Dexithea, a story which is preserved as follows:—(a) Pindar Paean [on Dexithea]: Euxantius told them the marvel that once befel him:—‘Surely I fear war with Zeus and the loud-thundering Earth-Shaker. Surely their levin-bolt and trident sent a land and its people every man into deep Tartarus, all but my mother and her well-walled house’—(b) Callimachus Origins: And therewithal insolence and a lightning-death, and likewise the wizards the Telchins and Demōnax who so foolishly flouted the blessed Gods—these the old man <sup>3</sup> did put in his writing-tablets, and aged Macelo mother of Dexithea, them twain that alone the Immortals left unharmed when they overturned an island for its sinful insolence. (c) Scholiast on the Ibis: It is said that Macelo and her sisters were daughters of Damon, and that Jupiter having enjoyed their hospitality saved them <sup>4</sup> when he struck the Telchins, of whom Damon was chief, by lightning for maliciously blighting all the fruits of the earth. To these daughters came Minos, and was united with Dexione, and begat Euxantius father of the Euxantidae. Compare also (d) Nonnus Dionysiaca: Macello entertained Zeus and Apollo at one [board]; and (e) Tzetzes Theogony: From the blood which dripped from the mutilated Uranus and entered the earth sprang first the three Furies Tisiphone, Megaera, and Alecto, and with them the four famous Telchins, Actaeus, Megalesius, Ormenus, and Lycus, whom Bacchylides calls Sons of Nemesis and Tartarus but some authorities of Earth and Sea.

had of the Lord of Archery, were it in the art of healing, were it in the kindly service of strangers; aye and much had Pantheides won of the Graces, and a marvel was he become to many men, ere he passed away and left the five sons of great repute, of whom to one because of his father's well-doing the high-throned son of Cronus hath given many bright wreaths,<sup>1</sup> and now hath made him victor at the Isthmus.

I say and ever shall, that the greatest honour belongeth to virtue and valour;<sup>2</sup> though wealth may be found walking with cowards and is fain enough to exalt a man's spirit, a nobler hope doth cheer the heart of one that is good to the Gods; and if, for all his mortality, he hath dower of health and can live on what is his own, then vies he with the first. Disease and helpless poverty apart, every human life is attended of delight. The poor desireth small things as much as the rich desireth great; to have a plenty of everything is no pleasure to mortal men, rather seek they to catch that which flies them.

<sup>1</sup> the Inscription mentions a victory of Argeius as ἀγένης or 'beardless youth' at Nemea; but that would be later than this, in which he is still competing among the παῖδες or boys    <sup>2</sup> the Gk. has the single word ἀρετή, which varies in meaning between virtue and valour or prowess

now thou, joy-bestowing Clio, and with them praise the swift steeds that ran for Hiero at Olympia. For with Victory the pre-eminent and Glory sped they beside the broad swirls of Alpheus, where they have made the happy child<sup>3</sup> of Deinomenes to win a wreath, and a multitude past number hath cried
'Ho for a thrice-blessèd man who possesseth of Zeus the widest-ruling office of all Greece and knoweth how to keep towered wealth unhidden of the black mantle of darkness!'

Rife are the shrines with festal offering of oxen, and rife also the streets<sup>4</sup> with hospitalities; and bright shines the flashing gold where high and rich wrought tripods have been set before the temple, in Phoebus' great precinct that is served by the Delphians beside the streams of Castaly.<sup>5</sup> To the awful fire rushed over them, then sent Zeus a black veil of cloud and quenched the yellow flame. Nothing that comes of the care of a God passeth belief. So then, the Delos-born<sup>1</sup> did bear away that old king to the land of the Hyperboreans and there give him dwelling, him and his slender-ankled daughters, by reason of his piety, because he of all mankind had sent up the greatest gifts to hallowed Pytho.

Yet of all the dwellers that are in Greece,<sup>2</sup> O illustrious Hiero, no man can say that any hath given to Loxias<sup>3</sup> so much gold as thou. If a man only batten not on envy, he will surely praise a favourite of Heaven, a lover of horses, a man of war, that holdeth the sceptre of the Lord of Laws, and eke hath share in the gifts of the violet-tressèd Muses,—one who, though his hand was terrible once in war, looketh calmly now that he is old on a happiness that is from day to day, well knowing it to be short. Yet deceitful is hope unto the hearts of us creatures of a day, witness the Far-darting Lord of the Oracle,<sup>3</sup> who said unto the son<sup>4</sup> of Pheres, ‘As I cry words the wise may understand; the deep sky is not to be defiled, the water of the sea doth not decay, gold cannot be tarnished; but a man, he may not pass by hoary eld and then recover blooming youth.<sup>1</sup> Yet virtue's light waneth not with a man's body, but is cherished by the Muse. Thou, Hiero, hast displayed before men the fairest of flowers; and one that hath succeeded getteth no honour of silence; so there shall be a true tale of things well done, and along with it men shall praise the grace of the honey-tongued nightingale of Ceos.<sup>2</sup>

Give thy unerring brain a gentle respite from its cares, and turn thy mind's eye this way, to look if it was with aid of the buxom Graces that a guest-friend of thine renowned as a servitor of golden-coifed Urania wove the song of praise he sent to a renowned city from a sacred isle.<sup>1</sup> Fain would he pour the voice from his breast in praise of Hiero.

Cleaving the deep sky aloft with his swift brown pinions the eagle-messenger of the wide-dominioned Thunderer putteth sure trust in his mighty strength, and the shrill-voiced birds, they cower in fear. No stay to him are the summits of the great earth nor yet the steepy billows of the unwearied brine, but in a void unabating sped by a breeze from the west, plies he his glossy plumage conspicuous to the eye. Even so for me now are there paths ten thousand every way to praise your prowess,<sup>2</sup> O ye lordly children of Deinomenes,<sup>3</sup> by grace both of dark-haired Victory and of brazen-breasted War;<sup>4</sup> may Heaven never weary of blessing you! And when the wondrous hero-child of Alcmena beheld him in his shining armour, first drew he the shrill-twanging string to his bow's end, and then, opening the lid of his quiver, picked out a bronze-headed arrow. But the ghost of Meleager appeared now close before him and spake as one that knew him well, saying, 'Son of great Zeus, stay thou there and calm thy heart, and launch not vainly from thy hands a brute arrow against a dead man's ghost. There's naught to fear.' The princely son of Amphitryon marvelled at his words and said, 'What God or man reared such a scion as this, and where? and who slew him? Sure the fair-girdled Hera will soon send the slayer of such an one against me also—albeit flaxen-haired Pallas, methinks, will look to that.'

Then answered Meleager weeping, 'Hard is it for earthly man to bend the will of a God. Else would my father Oeneus the smiter of steeds have made cease the wrath of rosebud-wreathèd Artemis, the reverend, the white-armed, when he besought her with the sacrifice of so many goats and red-backèd oxen. But nay, the Goddess-Maiden's wrath was irresistible, and she sped a wide-mighted boar, shameless in battle, into the lawns of Calydon, where on the flood of his strength he went goring the vine-rows and slaying the sheep together with every man that came athwart his way. With a right good will and for six days together did we that were the flower of the Greeks maintain a loathsome warfare against him, and when God gave us Aetolians the mastery, we buried those that were slain by the violent onset of the squealing boar, Ancaeus to wit and Agelaius the dearest of my trusty brethren whom Althaea bare in the far-famed palace of my father Oeneus; aye, and with them did a dire fate destroy yet others; for Leto's wily<sup>1</sup> huntress-daughter stayed not her wrath, and with a right good will fought we the stubborn Curetes for the tawny hide. Is there, I ask thee, in the palace of warrior Oeneus an unwedded daughter like in beauty unto thee? I would fain make such an one my splendid bride.' Whereat the ghost of the stedfast warrior Meleager answered him: 'Deianeira left I at my home with the green of youth upon her sweet neck, unwitting still of the golden enchantress Cypris.'<sup>1</sup>

O white-armed Calliopè, stay thou here thy well-wrought chariot, and sing now of Zeus Son of Cronus, Olympian captain of the Gods, and of Alpheus' never-wearying flood, of the might of Pelops,<sup>2</sup> and of Pisa, where the feet of the renowned Pherenicus won the race he hath come back from unto embattled Syracuse with a leaf of happiness for Hiero.<sup>3</sup> Now we should thrust envy aside with both hands, and if any man succeed, give praise for truth's sake. #### FOR LACHON OF CEOS

VICTOR IN THE [BOYS'] FOOT-RACE AT OLYMPIA<sup>4</sup>

The feet of Lachon have gotten him of most great Zeus the best of glories at the outpourings of Alpheus.<sup>5</sup> Past number are the deeds for which young men with wreaths thick upon their locks have sung erstwhile at Olympia for victories of vine-rearing Ceos in ring and in race-course. And now a hymn of Urania queen of song is chanted before thy house, O wind-footed son of Aristomenes, in honour of the victory in the foot-race with which thou hast given Ceos fame.<sup>6</sup>

FOR THE SAME

Thou radiant daughter of Time and Night, fifty months command thee, Day that art sixteenth at Olympia,<sup>1</sup> by favour of deep-rumbling Zeus to judge for Greece within a far-famed wall<sup>2</sup> both speed of nimble foot and pre-eminent might of limb; and to whomsoever thou mayst award the chiefest meed of victory, he is forthwith called famous and much-envied among men. When thou gavest the wreath's adornment unto Lachon son of Aristomenes [O then sure came unto] Chaerolas [in the earth] below a pious [medicine against] Death, that woeful silencer of lips<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> months were local in Greece; 50 and 49 lunar months, alternately, separated the successive Olympic festivals, which lasted from the 11th to the 16th of the Elean months Apollonius or Parthenius. The boys' events took place on the 14th, but the great banquet at the Prytaneum was on the last day, and it was then prob. that this ode was performed <sup>2</sup> of the Altis <sup>3</sup> Chaerolas (for the name cf. Bechtel Gr. Personennamen, p. 463) seems to have been a kinsman, perh. grandfather, of the winner; somewhat as in Pind. P. 5. 98 ff., the winner's wreath of victory, like an offering to the dead, gives his kinsman, who would have praised him but for death, temporary resurrection, as Pindar's ode gave it to the ancestors of Arcesilas

BACCHYLIDES

There the crimson-shielded demi-gods that were the flower of the Argives held the earliest jousts, held them for the sake of Archemorus slain in slumber by a huge and yellow-eyed serpent, an omen of coming slaughter.<sup>1</sup> Yet O thou powerful Fate! The son of Oicles<sup>2</sup> could not prevail on them to march back unto their populous streets. Hope robbeth men of their understanding; and then too it was she that sent Adrastus son of Talaiis to Thebes for to aid the wandering Polyneices. From those renowned jousts at Nemea comes fame to any mortal that crowneth flaxen hair with wreath biennial;<sup>3</sup> and now God hath given the same to the victorious Automedes. For he was conspicuous among the five-event-men even as the brilliant Moon of the mid-month night surpasseth the stars in radiance; aye even thus shone the marvellous figure of him amid the vast ring of Greeks, as he hurled the rounded quoit or evoked the people's shouts at the launching of a branch of the dark-leaved elder into high heaven,

<sup>1</sup> Archemōrus, the infant son of Lyeurgus king of Nemea, when his nurse left him to show a spring to the Seven Warriors as they passed on their way from Argos to Thebes, was killed by a serpent; whereupon they returned, buried him, and founded the Nemean Games in his honour

For their still-girlish hearts led them to go into the precinct of the purple-zonèd Goddess and boast that their father was far richer than the flaxen-haired consort of the dread wide-mightèd Zeus. Whereat in wrath she cast into their breasts a changed spirit, and with dire shrieks they fled to the leafy hills, far from the city of Tiryns and her God-built streets. Nine years had passed since the brazen-bucklered demi-gods that feared not the war-cry had left God-favoured Argos to dwell there, they and their much-envied king. For a relentless quarrel had

<sup>1</sup> Jebb compares Paus. 6. 3. 7: 'The statue of Eupolemus of Elis (at Olympia) is the work of Daedalus of Sicily, and the inscription upon it records that Eupolemus won the short footrace for men at the Olympic Games and that he was also victorious twice at Pytho and once at Nemea. The following also is told of him:—three of the Hellanodicae or judges stood at the end of the course, of whom two gave the race to Eupolemus and the third to Leon the Ambraciot, who afterwards sued before the council of Olympia the two judges who had given the victory to their fellow-countryman'

<sup>2</sup> Artemis was the goddess of Metapontion; the epithet suits the context, she consoles him for losing that victory by giving him this; and it suggests 'Ἡμερησία, the name under which she was worshipped at Lusi, cf. Paus. 8. 18. 8 leapt up from a slight beginning betwixt the brothers Proetus and Acrisius, and these bruised their peoples with feuds that passed the measure of right and with miserable fightings, till at last those peoples had besought the children of Abas that they should divide the fertile land and the younger should found Tiryns ere all fell into grievous plight. Then for the respect he bore unto the race of Danaïis and charioting Lynceus,<sup>1</sup> Zeus Son of Cronus had chosen to give them rest from their hateful woes; and the huge Cyclopes had come and built an exceeding good wall for the famous town, which now those godlike heroes so illustrious did inhabit instead of Argos the famous nurse of steeds. Thence was it that they fled speeding forth, those dark-haired virgin-daughters of Proetus; and their father's heart was seized with pain and his mind smitten with strange thought, and he had plunged a two-edged dagger in his breast had not his spearmen restrained him with assuaging words or force of arm. Meanwhile the maidens wandered wild for thirteen whole months in the thick forest, and fled to and fro in the sheep-walks of Arcady,<sup>2</sup> But when at last their father came to fair-flowing Lusus,<sup>3</sup> he took thereof water

From that spot passedst thou, O golden Mistress of peoples, with Achæan warriors unto a horse-rearing citadel, and dwellest now with happy fortune in Metapontion,<sup>1</sup> aye and possessest by Casas’ fair stream a delightful grove which those chieftains established for thee<sup>2</sup> when at last by the counsels of the blessed Gods they sacked the well-built city of Priam along with the brazen-corsleted sons of Atreus.

what a crushing hand the son of Perseus<sup>1</sup> lays with his manifold art on the ravening lion ! for the man-slaying bright bronze will not pierce that fearful body, nay, the sword is bent backward. O surely it shall come to pass that on this spot the Greeks do vie for wreaths in the sweating labour of the pancratium.<sup>2</sup>

There spring for man beside the altar of the peerless ruler Zeus, flowers of renowning Victory which for a very few among men do make signal glory all their lives, and when they be enwrapt in the dark cloud of death, bestow on them the immortal fame of a thing well done together with a destiny that cannot fail. These things fell to thee, O son of Lampon, at Nemea, and so thou 'rt come to magnify a lofty-wayed city, come with thy hair crowned with chaplets of all manner of gay flowers, come to the tune of voluptuous flutes and sweet-breathed revel-songs, come to thy native isle, an ensample of eminent might in the pancratium. FOR CLEOPTOLEMUS OF THESSALY

A happy destiny is God's best gift to man; but even as Chance crusheth the good if she come with a load of woe, so she maketh the wicked eminent if she win her way. Honour hath various shapes, and myriad are the kinds of human prowess; yet one outstandeth all, and it is his whom a just mind guides in what lieth to his hand. The deep misery of battle is no place for the voice of the lyre and the clear-ringing dance, nor hath the clash of bronze with bronze to do with merrymaking; rather in every act of man is the right time the best, and God too prospereth him that doeth a thing well. And now 'tis the time to sing a meed unto Cleoptolemus, to sing together of the precinct of Poseidon of the Rock and of Pyrrichus'<sup>2</sup> glorious chariot-victor son, who [went forth from] a hospitable and upright-judging [house . . .

Let me say it once for all, gain overpowers the finest wits.

42 A

Scholiast on Aristides Panathenaicus: ['if indeed the chariot too came originally from Athens and not from Sicily']: He says this because some authorities declare that the chariot was a Sicilian invention; for Bacchylides and Pindar, when they sang the praises of Hiero and Gelo in respect of horsemanship, suggested that that art was invented by the Sicilians.

Scholiast on the Odyssey ['the Centaur, famed Eurytion']: <sup>2</sup> Bacchylides believes in a different Eurytion; for according to him, when he was a guest of Dexamenus in Elis he insulted his host's daughter and was slain by Heracles, who came opportunely upon the scene.<sup>3</sup>

44-44 A

Scholiast on the Iliad: Zeus saw Europa the daughter of Phoenix plucking flowers with the Nymphs in a meadow, and falling in love with her, went down and changed himself into a bull; and breathing saffron from his mouth beguiled her, and took her on his back, and crossing the sea to Crete made her his bride, and afterwards gave her to wife to Asterion king of the Cretans, in whose house she bore three sons, Minos, Sarpedon and Rhadamanthus. The story is told by Hesiod and Bacchylides.<sup>4</sup>

Plutarch Life of Numa: Can we then, if we admit these instances of divine favour, refuse to believe that men like Zaleucus and Minos and Zoroaster and Numa and Lycurgus were visited by the Divine Power while they were guiding kingdoms and regulating polities? Or is it reasonable to suppose that Gods are in jest when they consort with such persons to their edification, but in earnest in their dealings, if such they have, with poets and warblers to the lyre? Yet, to quote Bacchylides,

If any say otherwise, broad is the path.

Apuleius On Sorcery [amatory verse]: Poetry of this kind has been composed before, among the Greeks, let me tell you, by a Teian, a Spartan, a Ceian<sup>2</sup>, and numberless others.

68<sup>3</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: They called the throw of the cottabus 'from the bend' because the right wrist was bent in making it, though indeed according to another explanation the ἀγκύλη was not the 'bend' but a kind of cup. Compare Bacchylides Love-Songs:

when she lifts her white arm and throws from the bend at the bidding of these young men.

Hephaestion On Poems [on a type of refrain]: There is also the epiphthegmatic, which differs from the ep hymnion in contributing to the sense of the passage, whereas the ep hymnion, as far as the sense goes, is a superfluous addition to the strophe. Compare Bacchylides:

Now when the epiphthegmatic is short, that is its name, but if it is so long as to make a strophe, and the strophe proper comes first and the epiphthegmatic second and then again the proper and after it the epiphthegmatic, and so on, such a system will be reckoned κατὰ περικοπήν ἀνομοιομερές, that is, as composed of like wholes whose parts or 'periods' are unlike.

From a First-Century Papyrus:

Hang no more to thy peg, my lyre, nor check the clear voice of thy seven strings. Hither to my hands! I would fain send to Alexander a golden feather dropt by a Muse, to be an adornment for his banquets on twentieth days, when the heart of noble youths is warmed by the sweet compulsion of the swift-circling cup, and their mind thrilled with a hope of the Love-Goddess, which sendeth a man's thoughts highest aloft when it be mingled with the gifts of Dionysus. [Hang] not up yet, [my lad,] the clear-voiced lute; for I am about to achieve a lovely flower of the [honey-breathed] Muses for the Hiero who is made so famous by his tawny steeds and eke for his comrades at the feast, and send the same to well-built Etna. Albeit ere this, when I sang the praise of that Pherenicus that is so noted among horses for his swift feet, Pherenicus and his victory beside e.g.<sup>2</sup> Alpheus, my branches were hacked privily till I bowed my head, yet did I burgeon forth in fresh vigour; aye then sought unto me all the young men and maids who resorted to the all-golden house of Zeus, when they set up therein garlands of gentle songs . . .

Let us wait for the Star of Morn that haunts the Philo That every Upright Man is Free: The Athenian general Miltiades, when the king of the Persians rallied the flower of the youth of Asia to his standard and crossed to Europe with an enormous host, to capture Greece, as he thought, without a blow, assembled the Allies at the Panathenaic stadium and, as a visual exhortation likely to prove more effective than any speech, showed them some cock-fighting. Nor was he disappointed. When the spectators saw the endurance and the feeling of honour which abides even unto death in these dumb creatures, they flew to arms like men ready to give their lives, without thought of wound or slaughter, if only they might be buried in the soil of a free country. For there can be no better inducement to the increase of courage than an increase of confidence in hopes for the future. This cock-fight is referred to by the tragic poet Ion in the following passage:

His body and his twin eyes smitten, he yet forgetteth not his might, not he, though his utterance is weak; nay, he preferreth death to servitude.

LIFE OF MELANIPPIDES

who make images which are without mind or motion, or those who make living creatures capable of thought and action?’

Aristotle Rhetoric: In like manner, a long sentence becomes a discourse in itself, like the purely instrumental parts of a song when they are too long. Hence the satire of Democritus of Chios upon Melanippides for making an instrumental interlude<sup>1</sup> take the place of the antistrophe:

He that does any ill to another does ill to himself, but of all ills the worst to the doer is the long interlude.<sup>2</sup>

The same stricture might well be made upon the users of long clauses.

Plutarch That a Life lived according to Epicurus is not worth living: For Hiero, surely, or Attalus, or Archelaüs could never have been brought to oust from their festive table Euripides, Simonides, Melanippides, or such men as Crates or Diodotus, in favour of buffoons like Cardax, Agrias, or Callias, and jazz-bandsmen like Thrasonides or Thrasyleon.

THE POEMS OF MELANIPPIDES

1

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on dates]: Melanippides of Melos, in the Danaïds, calls the fruit of the palm dates, where he describes those maidens thus:

For they wore not the shapely form of men, nor yet had they the voice of women, but did strenuously in seated chariots all about the sunny<sup>1</sup> woodlands, oftentimes rejoicing their heart in the chase, oftentimes seeking the frankincense' holy tear and the sweet-scented date or the smooth Syrian grains of the cassia.

2 MARSYAS

The Same: On the subject of flutes one of the guests observed that Melanippides in his Marsyas had rightly disparaged flute-playing in speaking of Athena thus:

Athena cast those instruments of music from her sacred hand and said, 'Away with you, ye shameful things, defilers of the body; I give not myself to my own undoing.'<sup>2</sup>

3 PERSEPHONE

Stobaeus Selections: From Porphyrius On the Styx:—The rivers that are supposed to flow in Hades have been given plausible names. Acheron is so called from ἄχρη 'pains'; compare Melanippides in the Persephonè:

And because it goeth pouring forth pains within the bosom of Earth, it is called Acheron.

4

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: Those who are ignorant of the true power of wine say that Dionysus is the cause of madness; but this is the purest slander. Compare Melanippides:

And they all began to loathe water,<sup>1</sup> who had never known wine before. Aye, it was not long ere some were like to die and others were uttering cries of frenzy.

5

The Same: Nicander of Colophon says that oīvos, wine gets its name from Oeneus: 'Oeneus crushed grapes in hollow cups and called it wine.' Compare also Melanippides:

6<sup>2</sup>

Plutarch Eroticus [on the care of lovers for the young and beautiful and their pursuit of them]: It is nothing low or violent; for grace and persuasion prompting 'sweet toil,' literally, 'and labour unlaborious,' lead them in the way of a virtue and a friendship, which receive their right perfection with Heaven's aid, and yet know no other God for guide or master save only the comrade of the Muses and the Graces and of Aphrodite, Love. For he it is who, in the words of Melanippides,

EURIPIDES

1-2 VICTORY-SONG TO ALCIBIADES<sup>1</sup>

Plutarch Alcibiades: His horse-breeding was famous, among other things, for the number of his racing-chariots. He was the only man, not excluding kings, who ever entered at Olympia as many as seven. And his winning not only first place but second and fourth according to Thucydides—second and third according to Euripides—is the highest and most honourable distinction ever won in this field. Euripides' Ode contains the following passage:

But I will sing thy praises,<sup>2</sup> son of Cleinias. A noble thing is victory, noblest of the noble to do what no Greek had ever done, be first and second and third in the chariot-race, and go unwearied yet, wreathed in the olive of Zeus, to make the herald cry you.

2<sup>3</sup>

The Same Demosthenes: The writer of the Eulogy of Alcibiades for his victory in the horse-race at Olympia, whether as is commonly believed he be Euripides or another, says:

Your happy man's first need is a famous country.

CLEOMENES, LAMYNTHIUS, GNESIPPUS

Scholiast on the passage: Hieronymus was a lyric poet and tragedy-writer whose works were uneven and ill-arranged because they had too emotional themes and were acted by characters with too formidable masks, though he seemed to win applause. He was caricatured for his long hair. That is why Aristophanes calls him a Death-cap, jesting in the manner of comedy at his need of the barber.<sup>1</sup>

The Same Clouds [SOCRATES]: The Clouds can become whatever they like; and if they see a fellow with long hair, one of these wild shaggy men like the son of Xenophantus, they make themselves like Centaurs by way of scoffing at his idiocy.

Scholiast on the passage: He means the dithyramb-writer Hieronymus, who was the son of Xenophantus, and ran too much after the boys and was always in need of the shears.<sup>2</sup>

on CLEOMENES, LAMYNTHIUS, GNESIPPUS

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: Since you have evaded the question put to you whether the Calydonian Boar is anywhere stated to have been white, I will tell you where, and you must investigate the proof. I happen to have read not long ago the Dithyrambs of Cleomenes of Rhegium, in one of which, entitled Meleager, the fact is stated.

The Same [on writers of low songs]: The author of the play called The Beggars, attributed to Chionides, speaks of a certain sportive writer of merry music called Gnesippus in the following lines:

Neither Gnesippus nor Cleomenes, I swear, could have made such a thing palatable on a nine-chord lyre.

The Same: According to Dicaearchus in his book on Olympia, the Purifications of Empedocles was recited there by Cleomenes the rhapsode.<sup>3</sup>

The Same: I too, to quote Epicrates' Anti-Lais:

Am letter-perfect in all the love-songs of Sappho, Meletus,<sup>4</sup> Cleomenes, and Lamynthius.<sup>5</sup>

CLEOMENES, LAMYNTHIUS, GNESIPPUS

And the author of the comedy called The Helots says :

It is old-fashioned to sing Stesichorus, or Alcman, or Simonides. We can listen to Gnesippus, who has invented songs for lovers to call out their mistresses with, iambycè<sup>1</sup> and three-cornered lute in hand.

Compare the Soft-Livers of Cratinus :

Pray who has ever seen me in love, Gnesippus ? (and the answer is) Not I ; far from it ; I really think I have never seen such an empty-headed fool.

And the same poet gibes thus at Gnesippus' poems in The Neatherds :

. . . who refused Sophocles a chorus when he gave one to the son of Cleomachus, whom I wouldn't have train a chorus of mine even for the feast of Adonis.

Again, in the Seasons :

And after him may go the son of Cleomachus, that trainer for tragedy who has a chorus of hair-removing-maids removing bad songs in the Lydian mode.

And according to the Stiff 'Uns of Telecleides he led a life of profligacy.

The Same : I had almost forgotten to mention to you the Lydè of Antimachus, and moreover her namesake the courtesan beloved by Lamynthius of Miletus. According to the Erotics of Clearchus each of these poets, falling in love with a foreigner called Lydè, composed a poem which he named after her, the former an elegiac, the latter a lyric.

LEOTROPHIDES

on LEOTROPHIDES

Scholiasts on Aristophanes<sup>1</sup>: (a) Because Leotrophides like Cinesias, was very thin; or because he too was a 'light' (that is, worthless) writer of dithyrambs . . . Leotrophides belonged to this tribe. But some authorities say that the allusion is to his lightness and thinness, resembling those of a bird. Compare Theopompus in the Shop-Girls :

Leotrophides the three-pounder will seem to Leontius as fair-complexioned and lovely as a corpse.<sup>2</sup>

(b) Because Leotrophides, like Cinesias, was remarkably thin. Compare Hermippus, The Men-Monkeys :

The poor are already sacrificing to you wretched three-legged beasts as thin as Leotrophides or Thumantis.<sup>3</sup>

CINESIAS

LIFE

Plato the Comedy-writer : Next comes the son of Oeagrus by Pleurisy,<sup>1</sup> Cinesias, scraggy and rumpless, with legs like reeds, prophet of Decline, branded in the flesh with many a cautery-mark of Euryphon's.<sup>2</sup>

Plato Gorgias: SOCRATES and CALLICLES:—S. First let us consider flute-playing. Do you not think, Callicles, that its sole object is our pleasure?—C. Yes.—S. And isn't this true of all such arts, for instance of competitive lyre-playing?—C. It is. S. And how about the training of choruses and the composition of dithyrambs? Is it not the same with them? Do you suppose that Cinesias son of Meles concerns himself to say something that shall be improving to hear, or something that shall make him popular?—C. Obviously the latter, Socrates, is the object of Cinesias.—S. And what of his father Meles? Was his singing to the lyre inspired by the highest motive? Whatever may be said of the son, is it not true that the father's ideal was not even the greatest possible pleasure to his audience? At any rate his singing annoyed them.<sup>3</sup> Be that as it may, do you not agree that both arts, singing to the lyre and the composition of dithyrambs, were invented in order to give pleasure?—C. Yes.<sup>4</sup>

LIFE OF CINESIAS

Lysias Defence on a Charge of Receiving Bribes: It is not right, gentlemen of the jury, that you should condemn me at the instigation of such men as these, who have cut such a figure in prosecutions for impiety,<sup>1</sup> and yet have the hardihood to accuse others though they cannot defend their own crimes—persons who, though they have served in fewer campaigns than the wretched Cinesias, nevertheless take umbrage about the interests of the State.

Aristophanes Clouds: SOCRATES:—By Zeus, you don't seem to know that these Clouds feed numberless sophists, feed prophets of Thuri, quack-physicians, feed manicured, ring-bedecked, leonine do-nothings, feed turners and twisters of song in the circular chorus, feed astrological knaves—for never a hand's turn of work, just because they make verses about them.

Scholiast on the passage: 'circular':—He is hinting at writers like Cinesias, Philoxenus, and Cleomenes, and means that these too are of the sophists, though they were writers of dithyrambs; for these were teachers of the circular choruses. He calls them 'turners and twisters of song' because, owing to their compositions not keeping within the limits of the 'mode,' they have too many καμπαί or 'flourishes'<sup>2</sup> . . .—The ancients considered the dithyrambs were the destruction of music; later he will attack them more bitterly [969].—'Turners and twisters of song':—The writers of dithyrambs; for καμπαί or 'twistings' is the name they give to instrumental interludes in the song.

I would fain become a bird, a clear-voiced nightingale.—P. Here, cut singing and tell me what you mean.—C. (speaks) I want you to give me wings so that I may fly up aloft—and get from the clouds some brand-new interludes all windswept and snowclad.—P. What? interludes from the clouds?—C. Yes; our art depends on them. The best things in a dithyramb are the aery and murky sort and azure-blue and pinion-spied. You shall hear presently.—P. Not I.—C. But you shall, I say. (Sings) For I'll thread for you the aery vault in likeness of the wing-spied, long-neckèd couriers of the sky.—P. Easy all!—C. By Zeus, I'll stop your breath then!—C.—now marching towards the humid path, now moving my frame to the Northwind nigh, ploughing the havenless furrow ethereal. sir.—P. Why, don't you like it now you're pinion-spied?—C. Is this how you treat the circular-chorus trainer whom the tribes are always fighting to get?—P. Then would you like to stay with us and train the tribe of Cercops for a chorus of flying birds for Leotrophides?<sup>1</sup>—C. I see, you're laughing at me. But all the same I'll never stop, let me tell you, till I've got my wings and made my flight through the air.

Scholiasts on the passage: (1379) According to Didymus, he says 'circle' because Cinesias is a composer of circular poems [poems for the circular choruses?], and 'splay-foot' because he is lame . . . But Aristotle in the Dramatic Catalogues tells us that there were two poets of the name; according to Symmachus, Euphronius says it is because Cinesias was splay-footed [or bow-legged].—(1383) . . . He is making fun of the poems of the dithyramb-writers; for it was their custom to use such epithets. He is also ridiculing their 'lightness' [or, as we should say, shallowness].—(1393) . . . Much of their style is like this, but the sense exiguous; compare the proverb, 'You have less sense even than a dithyramb.'—(1395) . . . He is satirising the dithyramb-writers.

Scholiast Aristophanes Lysistrata [a lively scene too long to print here, in which Cinesias with his baby implores his wife to leave the Acropolis which has been seized by the women, and come home]: He caricatures Cinesias as an uxorious husband. He was a writer of dithyrambs.

LIFE OF CINESIAS

Aristophanes Frogs: HERACLES (describing Hades): Then miles of mire and muck everlasting, and lying in it everyone who has wronged a stranger, bilked a harlot, beaten his mother, boxed his father, perjured himself, or made himself a copy of a speech from a play of Morsimus.—DIONYSUS: By the Gods, that's the place too for anyone who's learnt Cinesias' sword-dance.<sup>1</sup>

Scholiast on the passage (161): Cinesias was a dithyramb-writer, who composed a 'pyrrhich' dance . . . Cinesias attacked the comedy-writers on the ground that they had nothing to say. He was a nervous, timid man, and wasted to a skeleton . . .<sup>2</sup>

Aristophanes Frogs: DIONYSUS, AESCHYLUS, EURIPIDES: D. But once again, let each declare his plan for saving the State.—E. 'I know and I will tell you what I know.'—D. Tell away. E. Suppose Cinesias were to be made into wings for Cleocritus, so that he could 'soar high aloft over the ocean wave'—D. It would make a funny sight; but what's the sense of it?—E. Suppose the fleets fought, and they took cruets up and sent a shower of vinegar into the eyes of the enemy.

Scholiast on the passage: Cinesias was a thin man, and Cleocritus a profligate. He means, if you were to fasten Cinesias instead of wings to Cleocritus so that they rose in the air, the result would be that they would be carried away for good by the wind.—He is caricatured as being excessively thin and as a foreigner and a toady. Cleocritus is mentioned because he was hand and glove with Cinesias.

Scholiast on the passage: This is aimed at the dithyramb-writer Cinesias.

The Same [to Iacchus]: Thou it is who hast had our poor sandal split and our coat rent for fun and, be it said, economy, and found out how we can sport and dance without having to pay.

Scholiast on the passage: That is, they have been split on thy account . . . He seems to imply that the poets' plays had come to be staged on the cheap. Anyhow Aristotle says that it was in the archonship of this Callias (406 B.C., the date of the play), that it was decreed that tragedies and comedies should be produced together at the Dionysia; so that perhaps there was a like combination for the Lenaea; and not long afterwards Cinesias finally abolished the system of the staging of plays as a State-service [for wealthy citizens]; whence Strattis in the play he wrote upon him speaks of 'the shop'<sup>1</sup> of Cinesias the chorus-slayer.'

LIFE OF CINESIAS

. . . Now Cinesias was in fact very thin and very tall, and Strattis has an entire play written on him, in which he calls him Achilles of Phthia because he was always using the vocative of the word Phthian in his poetry. Thus he made fun of his appearance by addressing him as, ‘O Phthian Achilles.’<sup>3</sup> Other writers, including Aristophanes, have frequently called Cinesias ‘the lime-wood man’ because he wore stays of lime-wood to support his length and thinness. We know that he was of a sickly habit and altogether a strange being from what the orator Lysias tells us in the speech called The Oration in behalf of Phanias against an Unconstitutional Measure, where he makes out that he abandoned his art for the profession of informer and became a rich man. And there is no doubt that this is the poet, because he is represented to have been caricatured for his atheism and he is shown to have been of that character in the speech. The words of the orator are these: ‘I am surprised that you do not take it amiss that the upholder of the law in this case should be a man like Cinesias, whom you all know to have passed all limits in his defiance of law whether human or divine. Is not this the man who commits such an outrage upon religion that the world in general cannot even mention it with propriety and the comic poets tell you of it regularly every year? Is not this the man who, with Apolophanes, Mystalides, and Lysitheüs, appointed for their periodic revel one of the forbidden days of the calendar, under the name not of the New-Moon Club but the Devil's Own?—a name suitable, as it turns out, to the members' fortunes, but chosen doubtless not so much with that intent as to throw ridicule both upon the Gods and upon the law of their country. His colleagues ended as such folk often do. The best-known member of the club has been so visited by Heaven that his enemies do not wish him dead but hope that he may live long as an example, so that others may realise that irreligion is punished not in the children but in the fathers, for that these are visited with greater and severer calamities both in body and estate than all the rest of mankind put together. To be sick or to die of ordinary ills is the common lot of man, but to continue thus year in year out, to be dying day by day and yet be unable to make an end, is a fate deserved only by the committers of such sins as the defendant's.' Such is the orator's description of Cinesias.

Plutarch How the Young should listen to Poetry: When Timotheus, singing in the theatre, called Artemis 'frantic, mantic, corybantic,' Cinesias shouted back 'Such be your own daughter!' <sup>2</sup>

CINESIAS

THE POEMS OF CINESIAS

1 ASCLEPIUS <sup>1</sup>

Philodemus On Piety: Zeus struck Asclepius by lightning because, according to the writer of the Naupactica and the Asclepius of Telestes and (the like-named work) of the lyric poet Cinesias, he raised Hippolytus from the dead at the instance of Artemis; but according to the Eriphylè of Stesichorus it was because he raised Capaneus and Lyncurgus.

2 <sup>2</sup>

Erotian Glossary to Hippocrates: Most bandy-legged means very convex; for bandy-legged

and crooked mean distorted. Compare Hippocrates: 'the patient's ribs are very convex like bandy legs.' Asclapon employs the word of that which is concave on one side and convex on the other, as Cinesias uses it.

on PHRYNIS

Scholiast on Aristophanes <sup>3</sup>: Phrynis was a singer to the lyre, of Mytilene. He appears to have been the first to play the lyre at Athens <sup>4</sup> and to have won the prize for it at the Panathenaic Festival in the archonship of Callias. <sup>5</sup> He was a pupil of Aristocleides, a great singer to the lyre, who was descended from Terpander and flourished in Greece during the Persian Wars. Phrynis was a singer to the flute before he taught him the lyre. Istros tells us, in the work entitled The Lyric Poets, that Phrynis was a Lesbian, the son of Camon, and that he was originally one of Hiero's cooks, but was given with other slaves to Aristocleides. But this seems to be an invention; for if he had been a slave and a cook of Hiero's, the fact would not have been concealed by the comic poets, who often speak of him in connexion with the innovations by which he caused the deterioration of singing. Compare Aristophanes and Pherecrates.—He was the first to make changes for the worse in the use of the ‘modes.’ He was effeminate as a man and frigid as a composer.<sup>1</sup>

PRONOMUS

Plutarch Music: In short, lyre-singing in Terpander’s day, and indeed right down to the age of Phrynis, was always entirely simple. In old days it was not considered right to compose songs for the lyre like those of to-day with modulation of mode and rhythm.<sup>2</sup>

Proclus Chrestomathy [innovations in the Nome]: see on Timotheus, p. 291.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: Moreover there have been composers of bad lyric, of whom we are told by Phaenias of Eresus in his Tract Against the Sophists, where he says: ‘Telenicus of Byzantium, and also Argas, who were composers of bad nomes, were at no loss with respect to the proper character of that type of composition, but were unable, nevertheless, to make the smallest approach to the standard set by Timotheus and Phrynis.’<sup>5</sup> reason there were flutes peculiar to each 'mode,' and in the competitions every flute-player had flutes adapted to each. The first to play all the modes on one pair of flutes was Pronomus of Thebes. But nowadays the art of music is pursued in a random and inconsiderate way.

Planudean Anthology Anonymous:—

Greece judged Thebes to be first in playing the flute, and Thebes Pronomus son of Oeniades.<sup>1</sup>

Pausanias Description of Greece [the temple of Apollo at Thebes]: And there is a statue there of Pronomus, a flute-player who had great charm for the vulgar . . . It was he who invented flutes that were suited to any mode, and first played tunes differing in this respect on the same pair of flutes. We are told too that his facial expression and the versatility of his bodily movements used to bring down the house. Moreover there is a song composed by him for the Chalcidians on the Euripus, a Processional to Delos. Of him then it was and Epameinondas son of Polymnis that the Thebans set up statues in this place.

The Same [On the founding of Messenè by Epameinondas]: That day was devoted to sacrifices and prayers. On the following days they began to build the wall round the city, and houses and temples within it. The work was done to the accompaniment of no music but that of Boeotian and Argive flutes, and there was keen competition between the melodies of Sacadas and those of Pronomus.

Aristophanes Ecclesiazusae:

And if we sit in front we shall not be noticed so long as we gather up our cloaks; and when we show the beards we shall put on there, everybody that sees us will think we are men. Why, Agyrrhius is never found out in Pronomus' beard; and yet he was a woman once, though now, as you see, he's the biggest man in Athens.

Scholiast on the passage: Agyrrhius was a general of effeminate character who had commanded in Lesbos. He cut down the pay of the poets and was the first to pay members of parliament. Pronomus was a flute-player who had a great beard. Agyrrhius was addicted to unnatural vice.

Parian Chronicle: From the time when Telestes of Selinus won at Athens 139 years, in the archonship of Micon at Athens (402 B.C.).

Diodorus of Sicily Historical Library: About this year (398 B.C.) flourished the most famous dithyramb-writers, Philoxenus of Cythera, Timotheus of Miletus, Telestes of Selinus, and Polyidus painter and musician.

Apollonius Marvels of History: The musician Aristoxenus declares in his Life of Telestes that at the time of his visit to Italy certain remarkable things happened of which there was one which concerned the women. It seems that they were seized with a distraction which caused them when seated sometimes at their supper to appear to answer a call, and then rush incontinently through the door and run out of the city. When the Locrians and Rhegines asked the advice of the oracle on the matter, the reply was that in order to free themselves from this visitation they must sing Spring Paeans for sixty days. Hence the large number of paeon-writers in Italy.

for lovely beauty, she whom Clotho had assigned virginity unwedded and unchilded?—

that is, she would not have minded spoiling her looks, because of her virginity—and he continues :

Nay, vainly and not for the dance was this tale of minstrel-babblers sped to Greece, to make a reproach unto men a clever art—

(and then he praises flute-playing) —which the airy breath of the holy Goddess together with the resplendent swiftness of her nimble-wingèd hands hath given to Bromius to be best of all his menials.

TELESTES

4<sup>1</sup> HYMENAEUS

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on the stringed instrument called magadis]: Telestes in his Dithyramb Hymenaeus tells us in the following lines that it had five strings:

Then uttering various din they roused the horn-voiced<sup>2</sup> magadis, with five-lined jointure of strings plying the to-and-fro footrace of swift hands.<sup>3</sup>

5

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: The Phrygian and Lydian 'modes,' which were of foreign origin, were made known to the Greeks through the Phrygians and Lydians who emigrated to the Peloponnese with Pelops . . . Hence the passage of Telestes of Selinus:

The first to sing the Phrygian tune of the Mountain Mother amid flutes over the wine-bowls of Greece were they that attended upon Pelops; and the Greeks forthwith began to thrum the Lydian hymn with shrill-voiced twanging of the lute.

Stephanus of Byzantium Lexicon:<sup>1</sup> Miletus:—A famous city of Ionian Caria . . . The inhabitants are called Milesians, for instance Thales the son of Examyas, Phocylides, and Timotheüs,<sup>2</sup> the last the singer to the lyre, who composed 18 Books of Lyre-sung Nomes amounting to 8000 lines and Pronomia amounting to 1000 more. ## LIFE OF TIMOTHEUS Satyrus Life of Euripides (from a 2nd-Cent. Papyrus): When Timotheus was suffering from unpopularity in Greece because of his musical innovations, and in the depths of despair had actually made up his mind to take his own life, it is said that Euripides alone took the opposite line, and not only laughed at the audiences, but realising how great an exponent of his art Timotheus was, consoled him with the most comforting arguments possible, and went so far as to compose for him the prelude to The Persians, his victory with which put an end to Timotheus' unpopularity.

Plutarch Should Old Men Govern? Thus when Timotheus was being hissed as an innovator who broke the laws of music, Euripides bade him be of good cheer since he would soon have his audience at his feet.

The Same On Music: In like manner the lyric poet Melanippides, in his turn, refused to leave the art of music as he found it, and so also Philoxenus and Timotheus. Down to the time of Aristocleides<sup>1</sup> the lyre had had seven strings. Timotheus divided the Terpandrean 'mode' into a greater number of notes.<sup>2</sup> Flute-playing too has become more complex than it once was. In old days before the dithyramb-writer Melanippides, it had become customary for the flute-players to be paid by the poets, obviously because the poetry had played the first part in the performance and the flute-players had been merely assistants of the poets who trained the choruses. But later on, this practice fell into disuse. Thus Pherecrates<sup>1</sup> the writer of comedy introduces Music (as he calls her)<sup>2</sup> in the shape of a woman who shows every sign of having been badly used, and makes Justice ask her the cause of her terrible plight, whereupon Music (or, as we should call her, Poetry)<sup>3</sup> thus replies: "I'll tell thee gladly, for 'tis equal joy to me to speak as 'tis for thee to hear." My troubles all began with Melanippides; he was the first to take and let me down and make me a loose one with his twelve strings. But all the same he was a good enough fellow . . .<sup>4</sup> to what I suffer now. Next, that accursed Athenian Cinesias has done me so much damage by the extra-modal "flourishes" he inserts between the strophes, that the right rank of one of his dithyrambs looks like the left. But all the same he was a good enough fellow. As for Phrynis, he has bent me and twisted me and utterly destroyed me in a particular whirlwind of his own, with his twelve modes on seven strings. But all the same, he too was a good enough fellow. If he did any damage, he made it right again. But Timotheus now, he, my dear, has debauched me and mauled me till I'm not fit to be seen.—JUSTICE. And who is this Timotheus?—POETRY. A red-haired man from Miletus. He has treated me worse than all the others by drawing

And if he ever meets me walking alone<sup>3</sup> he strips me and undoes me<sup>4</sup> with his eleven strings.' Moreover Aristophanes the comic poet mentions Philoxenus, and tells us that he introduced (solo-)songs into the circular choruses. And other writers of comedy have shown up the absurd antics of the later composers who frittered music away till there was nothing left of it.

Plutarch Music [innovations in rhythm]: Innovations are ascribed to Aleman and also to Stesichorus, in both cases without departing from the beautiful manner. But Crexus, Timotheus, Philoxenus, and the other poets of their period were less refined and more desirous of novelty, aiming at the popular manner now<sup>5</sup> known as the thematic or effect-producing. For the employment of few strings<sup>6</sup> and the simplicity and grandeur of music have gone entirely out of vogue.

The Same (see on Polyïdus p. 404)

Plutarch Spartan Institutions: Disregard of the musical tradition was not allowed. Even Terpander, the oldest and in his time the greatest singer to the lyre, and a celebrator of the deeds of the heroes, was nevertheless fined by the Ephors, and his lyre nailed to the wall, because, to suit his voice, he added to it a single string more than was usual, and they, it seems, approved only of the simpler style of music. And when Timotheus was competing at the Carneian Festival, one of the Ephors took a knife and asked him from which end of the lyre he should cut off the strings which brought the number beyond seven.

Pausanias [on Sparta]: There is another way out of the market-place, past the building called the Scias or Shade, where the assembly is held to this day . . . Here the Spartans hung up the lyre of Timotheus of Miletus after convicting him of adding four new strings to the traditional seven when singing to the lyre.<sup>1</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: According to Artemon in the 1st Book of his work on The Dionysiac Monument,<sup>2</sup> Timotheus of Miletus appears in most accounts to have employed a magadis or lyre with an unusually elaborate stringing, and when he was called to account at Sparta for corrupting the musical tradition, and it was proposed to cut off the superfluous strings from his instrument, to have pointed out a statuette of Apollo there which held a lyre of the same number of strings as his, and so to have been acquitted.

Nicomachus Handbook of Harmony: The addition of strings beyond the eighth was due not to reason but to a desire to gratify the audience. Thus Theophrastus of Pieria added the ninth, Histiaeus of Colophon the tenth, Timotheus of Miletus the eleventh, and so on to the eighteenth.<sup>1</sup>

Clement of Alexandria Miscellanies : The first man to set poems to music was Terpander of Antissa, who thus dealt with the laws of Sparta ;<sup>2</sup> the Dithyramb was invented by Lasus of Hermione ; the Hymn by Stesichorus of Himera ; the Choral dance by Aleman of Sparta ; Love-poems by Anacreon of Teos ; dancing the Hyporcheme by Pindar of Thebes ; and Nomes were first sung to dance and lyre by Timotheus of Miletus.

Plutarch Music : The Lyre-sung Nome was established long before the Flute-sung, in the days of Terpander . . . Terpander composed Lyre-sung Proems in epic verse, and it is clear that the ancient Lyre-sung Nomes were of this nature from the practice of Timotheus, who sang his first nomes in hexameters with an intermixture of dithyrambic phraseology, so that he might conceal at the outset his sins against the musical tradition.

Proclus Chrestomathy : The Nome is in honour of Apollo and takes its name from his appellation Nomius.<sup>3</sup> The ancients used to make choruses and sing the Nome to flute or lyre, but Chrysothemis the Cretan first adopted a distinctive dress, and taking a lyre in his hand to represent Apollo, sang a nome solo, and as he became famous for this performance the competition has been of that type ever since. Terpander appears to have been the first to perfect the Nome by the employment of the heroic metre, but no small contribution was made after him by Arion of Methymna, who like him was both poet and singer to the lyre. Innovations were also made in it by Phrynis of Mytilene, who both combined the hexameter with the 'free' type of metre, and first employed more strings than the traditional seven. Timotheus afterwards brought it to its present condition.<sup>1</sup> The Dithyramb is full of movement and, expressing a high degree of 'possession' by means of the dance, is directed to evoking the emotions most characteristic of the God; wild, too, in its rhythms, it nevertheless employs a simple phraseology. The Nome, on the other hand, is sustained in an orderly and dignified style by the characters it describes; while its rhythms are easy and tranquil, it employs compound expressions.<sup>2</sup> Each type, of course, uses its peculiar 'modes,' the Dithyramb the Phrygian and Hypophrygian, the Nome the Lydian system of the singers to the lyre. The Dithyramb seems to have developed out of the country festivities and the merrymaking at drinking-bouts, while the Nome is probably derived from the Paeon, the former being of general application, a supplication composed to avert evil, the latter a private and personal appeal to Apollo. Hence the Nome is without the element of 'possession' which is found in the Dithyramb. For while in that we find drinking and sport, in the Nome we find supplications and great orderliness, since the actual deity concerned pervades the music, which is orderly and systematically constructed.

LIFE OF TIMOTHEUS

LIFE OF TIMOTHEUS

Hephaestion On Poems: 'Frec' verse is that which is written as it were at random and without any definite metre, like the lyre-sung nomes of Timotheus.

Aristotle Problems: Why are Nomes not written antistrophically like the choral songs? Is it because they were sung by professional actors who were naturally able to employ mimetic gesture and to extend themselves at will, with the result that their song became long and of varied shape, and the melody, like the words, went with the action and varied continually? For the mimetic element is more indispensable to the air than to the words. In the same way Dithyrambs, having become mimetic, are no longer, as they once were, antistrophic; and the reason is that in the old days they were danced by the ordinary citizen, and many found mimetic singing difficult, with the result that they employed in them the enharmonic style, because frequent modulation is easier for one than for many, and easier for the professional actor than for those who remain in their own character; and thus the poems they composed for them were simple, which is typical of the antistrophic system, involving as it does a recurring unit. It is for the same reason that what is sung upon the stage is not antistrophic, while the songs of the chorus are so. For the actor is a professional artist and a natural mimic, whereas the chorus does not carry its mimicry so far.

Pollux Onomasticon: The parts of the Lyre-sung Nome as arranged by Terpander are seven, namely the beginning, the after-beginning, the turning-down, the after-turning-down,<sup>1</sup> the navel or middle, the seal, and the epilogue.<sup>2</sup>

Macrobius Saturnalia: The famous poet Alexander of Aetolia, in the book entitled The Muses, tells of the enthusiasm shown by the people of Ephesus at the dedication of their temple of Diana, prizes being offered to induce the greatest poets of the day to compose various songs in honour of the Goddess.<sup>1</sup> In Alexander's lines Opis is the name not of the Goddess's companion, but of the Goddess herself. He is speaking, as I said, of the people of Ephesus: 'But hearing that all Greece honoured Timotheus for his skill with the lyre and its songs, they bade Thersander's son for a hundred of golden shekels to hymn the sacred millennium<sup>2</sup> and with it Opis the hurler of swift shafts who hath her sumptuous house on Cenchreus' bank'; and later he says 'nor leave unsung the works of Leto's Goddess-daughter.'

<sup>1</sup> as the older temple was not destroyed till 356 B.C. and T. died at least a year earlier, the connexion of this hymn with the dedication of the new temple must be a mistake

The Same [Callisthenes' reminiscences of Stratonicus]: After hearing the Birth-pangs of Timotheus he remarked 'If she had been brought to bed of a stage-carpenter<sup>2</sup> instead of a God, she couldn't have made more noise.'<sup>3</sup>

Alcaeus of Messene: Mingling harmonious voice with tender flutes, Dorotheüs piped of the woeful Trojans,<sup>4</sup> and of the lightning-made Birth-pangs of Semelè, piped of the prisoners of the Horse,<sup>5</sup> embracing withal the everliving Graces; and alone among the holy prophets of Dionysus escaped the swift wings of Blame—a Theban he, son of Sosicles; and so dedicated his mouth-band and reeds in the temple of Lyaeus.

Dio Chrysostom Orations [on envy]: Nor again was Alcmaeon, the man who was so handsomely treated by Croesus, envied by Solon or by any other of the wise men of his day. Permitted one day by the great Lydian to enter his treasury and take away as much gold as he liked, Alcmaeon went to work so manfully on the royal bounty as to go in dressed in a flowing gown with a full fold at the breast like a woman's and shod in boots purposely made much too large for him, and ended by powdering his hair and his beard with gold-dust and filling his mouth and both his cheeks with it, and when he came out could scarcely walk, like a flute-player performing The Birth-pangs of Semelè, much to the amusement of Croesus and his Lydians. And, weight for weight, Alcmaeon was not worth at that time a single drachma.<sup>6</sup>

7-9 SCYLLA

Aristotle Rhetoric: The opening of a declamatory speech may consist of praise, blame, exhortation, dissuasion, or a direct appeal to the audience; for that which gives the keynote of the speech must be relevant or irrelevant. A juridical speech, on the other hand, must have an opening analogous in function to the prologue of a play or the prelude of an epic. The Dithyramb of course resembles in this respect the declamation; compare:

TIMOTHEUS

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: And Odysseus (Od. 10. 208) gave 'red honey-sweet wine from one full cup, and poured thereon twenty measures of water; and the sweet scent rose from the mixing-bowl.' Compare too Timotheus in the Cyclops:

First poured he one ivy-wood cupful of the dark immortal dewdrops teeming with foam, then poured therein twenty measures, mingling the blood of Bacchus with the freshet tears of the Nymphs.

13

Chrysippus On Negatives: If the Cyclops in Timotheus thus declared:

14<sup>3</sup>–19 THE PERSIANS

Plutarch Life of Philopoemen: The story is told that during Philopoemen's second command, shortly after the victory of Mantinea, when there was a pause in his military operations because of the Nemean Games,<sup>4</sup> he first made a public display of his phalanx both drawn up in order of battle and going through its usual evolutions with vigour and despatch, and then visited the theatre during the lyre-song competition, accompanied by his young warriors in their military cloaks and crimson tunics, men all of an age and in the prime of their strength, who showed a high respect for their leader as well as the youthful pride which came of a long tale of victorious combats. At the very moment of their entrance, the lyre-singer Pylades, who was performing the Persians of Timotheus, began it with these words: and so effective was the combination of clearness of utterance with sublimity of diction, that the whole audience turned towards Philopoemen and clapped their hands for joy, like a people sure now of retrieving their historic prestige, whose pride a new confidence had made well-nigh the equal of their fathers'.

15

Macrobius Saturnalia: In the 4th Book of his treatise On the Gods Apollodorus gives the sun the epithet ἡήιος, declaring that Apollo is so called because he moves (ῥεσθαι) or goes (ἔλναι) through the universe even as the sun careers through the sky. This, however, is what we find in Timotheus:

Come, Sun, thou hurler of bright rays at the everlasting skyey vault, send from thy bowstring a far-flung shaft upon our enemies, O Healer to

16<sup>2</sup>

Plutarch How Young People should listen to Poetry: In the exhortations before battle Homer invariably says something like this: 'Honour, O Lycians. Whither flee you? now make you haste,' or 'But lay you each to heart honour and the fear of God, for a great conflict hath arisen,'<sup>3</sup> thus attempting, it would seem, to make virtuous men brave through a sense of shame for what is dishonourable, and able to overcome pleasure and submit to peril. And this is just how Timotheus in the Persians began, and rightly, the exhortation to the Greeks:<sup>4</sup>

Worship Honour the helpmate of battling

Plutarch Life of Agesilaüs: A sweet sight it was to the Greeks of Asia to see viceroys and generals who had long been tyrannous and insufferable and consumed with riches and luxury, now become the craven menials of a man who went about dressed in a coarse plain cloak, and suiting their actions to the short and sharp words of command affected by the Spartans. Well might many of them repeat Timotheus' line:

Ares is king; Greece fears no gold.<sup>2</sup>

Zenobius Proverbs: Ares is king:—a phrase from the Persians of Timotheus, which owing to the success the poem met with at Athens spread and survived as a proverb.<sup>3</sup> It is mentioned in the Thais of Menander.

Dionysius of Halicarnassus Literary Composition [the Cretic]: There remains one type of three-syllable rhythm which consists of two longs and a short, and makes three kinds of metre. If it has the short in the middle and the longs at either end it is called a Cretic, and it is not an ignoble metre. This is an example of it:

They<sup>1</sup> had put upon their feet<sup>2</sup> cornices of spearhead-like teeth,<sup>3</sup> and speeding forward a-row with heads bent,<sup>4</sup> swept off the foeman's pinewood arms.<sup>5</sup> But if there went from them so unerring a blow as to rend his thwarts,<sup>6</sup> at that spot all the crew would fall upon the enemy. Or if the daylight rushed against their sides,<sup>7</sup> they plied their myriad plashing pine-laths afresh upon a slanting course.<sup>8</sup> As for their victims, while, disparting their bodies this way and that,<sup>9</sup> they sought to inweave their sides with hemp,<sup>10</sup> some they charged and overthrew with renewed thunderbolts,<sup>11</sup> others sank headlong,<sup>12</sup> stript of their glorious honour by the iron.

Meanwhile the thong-bound cornel-shafted arrow-point that is forged in the fire, was let fly from the hand, and whirled its hurtling quill<sup>13</sup> to fall among men's limbs; and in solid mass sped murderous hurlstones, and coils tarred and flaming upon ox-flaying splints of wood;<sup>14</sup> while thronging life went

So spake he in broken accents, when overhead he heard<sup>5</sup> the scream of a black and baleful bird; whereat his eye grew dim and his cheeks pale and his lips were sealed; yet soon again he spake and said: 'Alas! meseems my end is nigh, nor far away

And now the Barbarian host went back in flight pell-mell. With necks outstretched<sup>2</sup> flew the ships, till this shoal or that brake every one, and they lost from their hands their vessel's mountain feet, and the white-shining children of their mouth leapt forth as they dashed one against another;<sup>3</sup> and the sea was shingled o'er with swarming bodies reft of the sunlight by failure of breath,<sup>4</sup> and with the same were the shores heavy laden; while others sat stark and naked on the island-beaches, and with cries and floods of tears, wailing and beating their breasts, were whelmed in mournful lamentation, and called upon the land of their fathers, saying: 'Ho, ye tree-tressèd dells of Mysia, save me out of this place to whence the winds did bring us; else never shall the dust receive my body. me, I pray you, where I would my master had never built o'er the floating Hellè that roof of far but final traverse.<sup>1</sup> For never then should I have left Tmolus and the Lydian city of Sardis, to come and fend off the Grecian War God. But now alas! where is to be found a sweet and secure refuge from death? Troy straits alone would assuage my woe, if I might but fall before the mighty black-flower-robèd knees of the Mountain-Mother and clasp the fingers of those lovely arms. O gold-tressed Mother-Goddess, save and deliver this trammelled life of mine, of mine, or some weapon-skillily wight will carry me off with his cut-throat steel forthwith, or else the ship-wrecker North-winds that march a-row o'er the billows will make an end of me with their night-freezing blast; for the wild wave has torn from off me all the woven covering of my limbs, and there I shall lie for a pitiable banquet to the carrion-eating tribes of birds.'

The king also, when he beheld his routed host go backward in confusion, fell on his knees and laid hands upon himself in the storm of his misfortune saying: 'Woe for the razing of homes! and alas for you, ye desolating Grecian ships that have destroyed a populous generation of young men, and have so done that our ships that should have carried them back home shall burn in the flaming might of furious fire, and the pains of lamentation be upon the land of Persia.<sup>1</sup> O ill hap that leddest me to Greece! But ho! come ye quickly, yoke me my chariot and four, and you, bring ye out my countless wealth to the wagons, and burn my pavilions, that it profit them not of my riches.'

As for the others the while, they set them up trophies to be a most holy place of Zeus, and hymned the great Healing-God men cry to, beating the ground pat to the tune in the high-stept dance.<sup>2</sup> that teemeth with blossoms of youth, dings me and drives me with the flare of censure, for that I dishonour the ancient music with poems young. Yet do I keep no man, be he young or old or my own compeer, from these my songs; 'tis the debauchers of the olden music, them keep I off, the tune-torturers who shriek as long, and shrill as loud, as any common crier. In the beginning did Orpheus son of Calliopè beget the motley-musicked shell on Mount Pieria; and after him came the great Terpander, born of Aeolian Lesbos at Antissa, and yoked the Muse unto poems ten;<sup>1</sup> and lo! now Timotheus openeth the Muses' rich and cloistered treasure-house of song, and gives the lyre new life with times and measures of eleven strings, nursing he of Miletus, the town of a twelve-walled people<sup>2</sup> that is chief among the Achaeans.

But to this city I pray thee come, thou Far-darting Pythian with the gifts of prosperity and a peace abounding in orderliness for an untroubled people.

Plutarch: Whether Self-Praise is Permissible: But a man who wins the wreath in a competition is proclaimed by another person, and obviates the unpleasantness of the blowing of one's own trumpet, which we rightly dislike in Timotheus where he writes of his victory over Phrynis:

A happy man were you, Timotheus, when the herald cried that the winner was Timotheus of Miletus over the Ionian triller the son of Camon.<sup>2</sup>

For we feel that with entire disregard of taste and custom he is advertising his own victory.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: If then I have offended, O thou hunter of finest nouns and verbs, do not be angry. For, to quote the poet Timotheus of Miletus:

I sing not the old songs, for my new songs are better; a young Zeus reigns and Cronus' rule was long ago; away with the ancient Muse!<sup>2</sup>

25<sup>3</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: The ancient Nestor was the greatest drinker among the heroes . . . and he alone has had his cup described by Homer, as Achilles has had his shield. He took it to the war with him as he did the shield 'whose fame,' according to Hector,<sup>4</sup> 'reached even to the sky.' Indeed we might apply (literally) to his cup the phrase quoted by Antiphanes in the Caeneus, where he says: 'Then give me, pray, what Timotheus calls

26

The Same [on riddles]: Compare Anaxandrides' Aeschra: 'He has but now cut up (the ox), and the end-to-end portions of the carcase he subdueth in the fire-built covert, as Timotheus says, my boys, when he means, I suppose, the pot.'

Plutarch The Good-Fortune or Virtue of Alexander: Archelaüs appearing somewhat stingy in the matter of his gifts, Timotheus hinted at it several times by using the following phrase in a song

'But as for you, you beg it.'

Plutarch Dinner-table Problems: [on sleeping in the moon-light]: It is also said to be a specific for promoting easy labour when the moon is full, reducing the pains by a remission of the moisture. Hence, I take it, Artemis is called Bringer-to-bed and the Midwife, being identical with the Moon. Timotheus is quite clear on the point:

through the blue vault of the stars and of the swift-delivering Moon

30

Porphyrus quoted by Stobaeus Selections [on the soul]: Implying further that after death the souls of the pious have their proper place around the moon, Homer uses the following words:<sup>4</sup> 'But the Immortals will send thee to the Elysian Plain and the ends of the earth, where lives the golden-haired Rhadamanthus,' naturally giving the name of Elysian Plain to the surface of the moon illuminated by the sun when, in Timotheus' phrase, she groweth with the sun's rays.

LICYMNIUS

LIFE

Aristotle Rhetoric: But the poets whose works are in everybody's hands are those who write (not to be performed but) to be read, such as Chaeremon, whose style is as finished as that of a professional speech-writer, and among the dithyrambic poets, Licymnius.

The Same: The beauty or ugliness of a word consists in the first place, according to Licymnius, in the sounds of which it is composed or the meaning which it conveys.

The Same: Now a term should be applied only in speaking of a class and a real distinction; otherwise it is empty and mere nonsense, like the term used by Licymnius in his Art, where he speaks of 'speeding-on' and 'aberration' and 'ramifications.'

Scholiast on the passage: (a) Licymnius, who was one of the dithyramb-writers, was an accurate writer of prose;<sup>1</sup> (b) Licymnius was an orator; it was to repetition that he gave the name of 'speeding-on.'

Plato Phaedrus [on rhetoric]: And what of Polus and his so-called shrines of learned speech<sup>2</sup>—diplasiology (or word-repetition), gnomology (or the making of sententious remarks), iconology (or the use of metaphors), and all the other -ologies passing under the name of Licymnius and presented by him to Polus by way of improving his style?

Dionysius of Halicarnassus The Fine Technique of Demosthenes [on Plato]: And as if this were not enough, in the very next sentence there is an example of the same thing: 'We require a speech which will give the dead adequate praise and the living kindly exhortation.' Cyrus had been besieging the city without getting any nearer to taking it, and was greatly afraid that its allies might rally to Croesus' aid and destroy his army, when this girl, according to the story, came to a compact with him to betray the town if he would marry her according to the laws of the Persians, and with the help of certain men whom she made privy to her plan, admitted the enemy to the summit, where no guards were placed owing to the natural strength of the ground. Cyrus nevertheless refused to keep the promise he had made her.

LIFE

—Soc. There's another thing you ought to learn about proper names, and that is to distinguish masculine from feminine.—STR. But I know which are feminine, trust me.—Soc. Well?—STR. Lysilla, Philinna, Cleitagora, Demetria (684).—Soc. And masculine names?—STR. There's thousands; Philoxenus, Melesias, Amynias (686).—Soc. But they're not masculine, you bad boy.—STR. Not masculine enough?—Soc. Not a bit masculine; how would you call Amynias if you saw him?—STR. Call him? why, like this; Hi, Amynia! (691).—Soc. D'ye see? That's a woman's name.<sup>2</sup>—STR. Quite right too; she won't join up.

Scholiast on the passage: (684) These were harlots. —(686) These are satirised for effeminacy.<sup>3</sup>—(691) The poet satirises the man by playing with the ending of the name.

Plutarch Dinner-Table Problems [whether the greater delicacies come from the sea or the land] : Yet the best judge of the properties of a drug is to be found in the greatest physician, and of the artistic value of a musical performance in the greatest connoisseur of music, and so the best critic of a delicacy is the greatest gourmet. In such matters as these we must not seek the decision of Pythagoras or Xenocrates, but of Antagoras the poet, of Philoxenus son of Eryxis, and of the painter Androcydes.<sup>2</sup>

The Same How the Young should hear Poetry : If, as the poet Philoxenus said, the best of meat is not meat and the best of fish not fish . . .<sup>3</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner : Most of the philosophers have a better claim to be called slanderers than the comic poets. Take Aeschines the pupil of Socrates, in his book Telauges . . . and his Callias not only has an account of the quarrel between Callias and his father, but contains gibes at the sophists Prodicus and Anaxagoras. For he declares that Prodicus finished the education of Theramenes, and the other that of Philoxenus son of Eryxis and Aripgrades brother of Arignotus the singer to the lyre, intending the reader to infer the nature of this education from the gluttony and general depravity of the pupils.

The Same [on gluttony]: To quote Theophilus,<sup>1</sup> 'Unlike Philoxenus son of Eryxis, who is said to have blamed Nature and wished that he had had the neck of a crane so as to have the greater pleasure in eating.'<sup>2</sup>

The Same [on the same subject]: Other authorities vouch for Philoxenus' weakness for fish; Aristotle, more broadly, speaks to his love of his dinner, where he says: 'They spend the whole day holding forth to chance audiences at the puppet-shows or to travellers just arrived from Phasis or the Borysthenes, though they have never read anything but Philoxenus' Banquet, and indeed have never finished that.' According to Phaenias, the poet Philoxenus of Cythera, etc.<sup>3</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on descriptions of banquets]: Plato the comic poet speaks of the Banquet of Philoxenus the Leucadian<sup>4</sup> thus:—'A. While I am here in the wilds I am going to read myself this book.—B. Why, what on earth is that? —A. A new cookery-book by Philoxenus.—B. Give me a sample of it.—A. Well, listen: 'With onion I'll begin, with tunny end.'—B. With tunny? Then in that country it's a real advantage to be last in the

from the rule of consideration for one's neighbours as openly to put his hand into the hot water at the baths and rinse his mouth out, so that by inuring both hand and mouth to heat he might the more readily tackle hot food. For it was said of him that he would suborn the cooks at a dinner to serve the food extremely hot, so that he might despatch the whole of a dish while his neighbours were perforce waiting for it to cool.' The same tale is told of Philoxenus of Cythera.<sup>1</sup>

1-5 THE BANQUET

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on wreaths] The dithyramb-writer Philoxenus in the work called The Banquet makes the wreath the beginning of his feast, thus:

Then came water for the hands. A dainty child bore it round in a silver ewer and poured it over them, and then brought a wreath that was double-woven from thriving sprigs of the delicate myrtle.

Phaon<sup>1</sup>—describes the provision made for a feast in the following terms :

In came pairs of lads with shining-faced tables,<sup>2</sup> one for these of us, another for those, till the house was full. And each table glistened in the rays of lofty lamps, crowned thick as they were with dish and side-dish and a concourse of platters, luxuriant all with the manifold inventions of the art of good living, baits of the soul. Others meanwhile brought baskets of snow-complexioned loaves, and for the first course came no tureen, my sweet sir, but a nail-studded charger,<sup>3</sup> the greatest in the world, was laden with the finest imaginable, irresistible, gleaming, eel, a conger to wit, vomiting sorb-apples, a dish for a God!<sup>4</sup> and yet on its heels came another as large, and a turbot thereon great as a cart-wheel. And little tureens there were too, the one of shark cutlets, the other of ray, aye and another dish there was teeming with tender squid

And then chickens and jugged hare, and piping dishes galore of partridge and of pigeon, and with them soft-bosomed loaves. And cheek by jowl with these came yellow honey, and clotted cream so thick that any man would say—and say it I did—it was tender cheese. Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: And since Philoxenus of Cythera, too, in his Banquet, speaking of 'second tables' (or dessert) has mentioned many of the delicacies now lying before us, let us quote his words:

The first tables now being gone,<sup>3</sup> they brought in those bright and shining ferryboats with many good things fraught, called by mortal men the second tables, and by the immortal Gods the horn of Amalthea;<sup>4</sup> and in the midst thereof was builded a great joy to man, that white milky marrow, to wit, that hideth her face in a fine cobweb-like veil, for shame lest we see she hath perforce left the goat-born

PHILOXENUS OF CYTHERA

LIFE

Suidas Lexicon: Philoxenus:—Son of Eulytides,<sup>2</sup> of Cythera, lyric poet; wrote twenty-four *Dithyramb*s; died at Ephesus. When Cythera was enslaved by the Athenians,<sup>3</sup> he was bought by a certain Agesylus and brought up by him, and was called Myrmex or the Ant.<sup>4</sup> He received his education after the death of Agesylus, when he became the property of the lyric poet Melanippides.<sup>5</sup> According to Callistratus he belonged to the city of Heraclea in Pontus. He wrote a Genealogy of the Æacids in lyric verse.

Parian Chronicle: From the time when Philoxenus the dithyramb-writer died at the age of 55, one hundred and sixteen years, in the archonship of Pytheas at Athens.<sup>6</sup> Dionysius of Halicarnassus Literary Composition: The older lyric poets, by which I mean Alcaeus and Sappho, wrote in short stanzas; their few lines admitted but few variations, and they used the epode very sparingly. Poets like Stesichorus and Pindar, however, made their sentences longer and distributed them among many metres and lines simply from a desire for variety. The dithyramb-writers went further. They varied the styles, using Dorian, Phrygian, and Lydian in one and the same poem; modulated the melodies, making them at one time enharmonic, at another chromatic, and at another diatonic; and persisted in doing what they liked with the rhythms. This is true at least of the school of Philoxenus, Timotheus and Telestes; with its earlier exponents the dithyramb was of regular shape. Prose, on the other hand, enjoys complete freedom to adorn its structure with all the variations it chooses.

Plutarch On Music [on the decay of music]: The comic poet Aristophanes mentions Philoxenus, saying that he introduced lyric (solo-)songs into the circular choruses.<sup>1</sup>

The Same: It is clear that improvement or the reverse comes by way of the various schools and systems, from a passage of Aristoxenus, where he gives the following account of his contemporary Telesias of Thebes. This man, as it happened, was instructed in the best music and learnt the works of the great composers, including Pindar, Dionysius the Theban, Lamprus, Pratinas, and all the other lyric poets who were good string-musicians. Not only this, but he became an excellent player of the flute, and also received an adequate general education. No sooner, however, had he come to man's estate than he fell so completely under the influence of the over-elaborate popular music, as to despise the excellent tradition in which he had been reared, and direct himself to mastering the productions of Philoxenus and Timotheus—and not all of them, but only the most elaborate and innovating. He now began to compose; but his experiments in both styles, the Pindaric and the Philoxenean, left him unsuccessful in the latter. Such was the influence of the excellent training of his early years.

Philodemus On Music: If we compare the dithyrambic styles of Pindar and Philoxenus we shall find a great difference in the characters presented but an identity of style.

Scholiast on Aristophanes Plutus [on the loves of Laïs]: . . . Laïs was the daughter of Timandra, who was of Hyccara in Sicily. Timandra was given by the Sicilian tyrant Dionysius to Philoxenus the dithyramb-writer, and accompanied him to Corinth, where she became notorious, finding many lovers and much fame as a courtesan.<sup>1</sup>

Diodorus of Sicily Historical Library:<sup>2</sup> Turning now to Sicily, we find the Syracusan despot Dionysius enjoying peace and tranquillity after the anxieties of the Carthaginian War. He now set to work with enthusiasm on the writing of poetry, summoning all the famous poets to his court, raising them to positions of honour, and submitting his exercises to their constant criticism. The beneficence he showed them led to flattery, and flattery to conceit, till he prided himself far more upon his poems than upon his success in the field. One of his preceptors, the dithyramb-writer Philoxenus, whose own poetical style secured him high consideration, was asked one day at an after-dinner recital of the despot's villainous poems to give the author his opinion of them; and his opinion proved to be so candid that Dionysius took umbrage, and soundly rating him for letting envy override truth, commanded the attendants to consign him forthwith to the stone-quarry. The next day, his friends urging him to pardon the misdemeanour, he made it up with the poet, and had dinner laid for the same company. But as the evening wore on, he was again boasting about his poems, quoting what he considered really successful lines and asking, 'What do you think of that?' To which the poet made no answer but to call the despot's attendants and bid them hale him to the stone-quarry.<sup>1</sup> Now, however, Dionysius smiled at his wit and bore with his outspokenness—for laughter turned the edge of his affront—and common friends of both begging the despot to overlook the poet's ill-timed candour, Philoxenus made his patron the unexpected promise that his answer should preserve both the truth and Dionysius' reputation. He was true to his word. The despot's citations, it seems, were descriptive of something pathetic, and in answer to the request for his opinion Philoxenus now replied, 'Pitiable,' and by this equivoque made his promise good. For Dionysius took the word 'pitiable' in the sense of 'pathetic, full of pathos,' and knowing that pathos was one of the points of a good poet, understood the criticism as praise, while the company, accepting the real sense 'utterly pitiable,' realised that the prince was guilty of a genuine lapse.<sup>1</sup>

Lucian Against the Uncultured Man who bought many Books: It is said that Dionysius wrote tragedy of a sort so entirely feeble and ridiculous as to cause the repeated consignment of Philoxenus to the stone-quarry because he could not forbear to laugh at it. Realising that he was being put to scorn, the despot procured at great pains the writing-tablet which had been used by Aeschylus, and flattered himself that he would draw inspiration from it. But alas! he wrote still worse—for instance, 'Came Dionysius' wife Doridium'; and, 'Ah me! I've lost a serviceable wife,' that too came from the writing-tablet; and again, 'The fools that are among us mock themselves.' Now this last citation Dionysius might have applied pat to your case. Had he done so, he would have deserved to have that writing-tablet gilded for him.

LIFE OF PHILOXENUS OF CYTHERA

asked. It seems that after his escape from the Syracusan stone-quarry to which he had been consigned for failing to praise the tragedies of the tyrant Dionysius, Philoxenus of Cythera was sent for by his late patron from Tarentum where he now lived. He determined not to reply by ordinary letter, but took a roll of paper and merely inscribed in it a succession of O's, thus indicating that he refused to return.<sup>1</sup>

Scholiast on Aristides:<sup>2</sup> (1) After his flight Dionysius wrote to Philoxenus urging him to return and promising that he would find him a generous host. But he replied by a letter which contained nothing but a row of O's, by which he meant, 'You are nothing to me, I don't care, I won't come to such as you. Go weep, go wail, go hang!' <sup>3</sup>—(2) Philoxenus of Cythera, after making his escape from the stone-quarry to which the despot Dionysius had committed him for refusing to praise his tragedies, was living at Crotona in Italy, when Dionysius heard of it and requested him to return to Syracuse. Whereupon he took paper and wrote in the middle of the page a small O, and a larger one round it, and a still larger one round that—like this,<sup>4</sup> and when he had filled the paper with concentric O's sent the paper off to Dionysius as an emphatic and repeated 'No.' Hence the proverb 'The O of Philoxenus' of emphatic denials. It is such a denial that Aristides makes here.—His words ‘Bade him go hang with the utmost outspokenness’ are to be explained thus: such a denial is as though he said to him, ‘Go hang!’<sup>1</sup>

Plutarch Against Borrowing: Why give such instances when the lyric poet Philoxenus, having been assigned a farm in a Sicilian colony with plenty to live on and an excellent house, exclaimed when he perceived luxury, soft living, and want of refinement to be general in that country, ‘Such things shall not be my fate; I’ll leave them to theirs,’<sup>2</sup> and so handed over the farm to another man and left the district.

Lucian On Not Believing Slander too Readily: Sometimes, however, the hearer himself provides the opportunity for the slander, and the ill-disposed succeed by accommodating themselves to his temperament . . . If he be poetically inclined and prides himself upon it they exclaim, ‘By Zeus, Philoxenus did scoff at your lines!—pulled them to pieces and said they were unmetrical and wrongly constructed.’

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: In respect of such sallies of wit Stratonicius became an emulator of the poet Simonides, if we may believe Ephorus in the 2nd Book of his treatise On Inventions, where moreover he declares that Philoxenus of Cythera had a similar bent.

Diogenes Laertius [on Arcesilaüs]: To a disputant of the school of Alexinus who was unable to give a proper account of some argument of his master’s, πρὸς τοὺς πλινθιακοὺς πραχθὲν εἶπεν· ἐκείνος γὰρ τὰ αὐτοῦ κακῶς ἄδοντας τούτους καταλαβὼν αὐτὸς τὰς πλίνθους αὐτῶν συνεπάτησεν εἰπών, ‘Ὡς ὑμεῖς τὰ ἐμὰ διαφθείρετε καὶ γὰρ τὰ ὑμέτερα.’

he told the story of Philoxenus and the brickmakers. One day Philoxenus found the brickmakers singing a song of his own badly, and immediately trampled the bricks they were making underfoot, exclaiming, 'As you destroy things of mine, I destroy things of yours.'

Appendix to Stobaeus Anthology [from the Tracts of Aristonymus and from Socrates]: The musician Philoxenus, when asked what was the chief aid to education, replied 'Time.'

The Same [from the works of Democritus, Epicetetus, and other philosophers, poets and orators]: Philoxenus advised us to honour our teachers more than our parents, because our parents cause us to live but our teachers to live well.

Suidas Lexicon: Antigeneides:—Son of Satyrus; of Thebes; a musician; Philoxenus' singer to the flute. He was the first to wear Milesian shoes; and in the Reveller he wore a yellow cloak. He wrote lyric poems.<sup>1</sup>

Aristotle Politics: All revelry and all similar forms of excitement belong, of all instruments, to the flute, and receive their proper expression, of all the 'modes,' in the Phrygian. Thus the Dithyramb appears to be admitted on all hands to be a Phrygian form; and of this many proofs are offered by competent authorities, notably Philoxenus' failure to compose his Dithyramb The Mysians in the Dorian mode; for he was driven by the nature of the case to fall back on the appropriate mode, the Phrygian.

LIFE OF PHILOXENUS OF CYTHERA

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on gourmets]: According to Polemon, the painter Androcydes of Cyzicus, who was a lover of fish, carried his luxury to such a pitch as to depict the fish swimming around his Scylla with the most careful accuracy. The love of fish shown by Philoxenus of Cythera,<sup>1</sup> the dithyramb-writer, is thus described by the comic poet Machon :

Philoxenus, maker of dithyrambs,
Was, so men say, a mighty epicure.
He bought at Syracuse a cuttle-fish
Two cubits long, which, duly dressed for table,
He ate, save for the headpiece, well-nigh whole ;
Seized with an indigestion he fell sick ;
The doctor came, saw he was in sad case,
And cried, ' If your estate needs ordering,
Order it quickly ; at an hour past noon You'll die.' ' All's done,' says he, ' all's long been done.

My dithyrambs, praise to Heaven, I bequeath
Full-grown and wreathèd ;<sup>2</sup> them I do entrust <sup>3</sup>
To the Muses, my milk-sisters, to be wards
Of Aphrodite and Dionysus ; such Is my last will and testament. But now
Since Charon from Timotheüs' Niobè
Suffers me not to tarry, but shouts " Come,
The ferry waits ! " <sup>4</sup> and dark imperious Fate
Calls me—O, that I may trot off, my friends,
With all I have, give me my cuttle-ends !'

And in another part he says :

Philoxenus, they say, he of Cythera Wished that his throat had been three cubits long,
To make his drinking last as long 's could be
And all his victuals give him equal joy.

And Diogenes the Cynic died of an over-loaded stomach<sup>1</sup> from eating a cuttle-fish raw. Of Philoxenus Sopater the parodist writes as follows :

For in between two feasts of fish he sits
And gazes straight into the side of Etna.<sup>2</sup>

Polybius Histories : It is a matter of common knowledge that the Arcadian system is almost unique. In Arcadia the children are by law taught first to sing the hymns and paeans with which each community according to its custom honours the heroes and Gods. Later they learn the 'nomes' of Philoxenus and Timotheus and dance them in keen competition every year for the Dionysiac flute-players in the theatres, the boys competing in the children's contests and the young men in what are called the men's contests. Nay, in like manner at all times when they dine together they rather call upon each member of the company for his song than employ professional musicians to entertain them.

praises as follows : 'The poet Philoxenus stands in a class by himself. In the first place he uses new words of his own everywhere. Secondly, how well he mingles his music with changes of time and key ! He was a God among men ; for he knew what true music is. As for the poets of to-day, setting other men's tunes to their miserable words they write ivy-wreathed, fountain-clear, flower-hovering, but miserable, stuff.'

THE DITHYRAMBS OF PHILOXENUS OF CYTHERA

1-11 CYCLOPS OR GALATEA

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner : According to Phaenias, the poet Philoxenus of Cythera, who loved a good dinner, supping one day with Dionysius and observing that the prince was served with a large mullet and himself with a small one, took his mullet up and put it to his ear. When Dionysius asked why he did so, he replied that being engaged on his Galatea he wanted his fish to give him news of Nereus' country, and that she had answered 'I have been caught too young to understand it ; Dionysius' mullet is older and can give you all information.' Whereupon the prince burst out laughing and sent him his own fish. It seems that Philoxenus was one of Dionysius' favourite bottle-companions, and when he was caught one day in the arms of his patron's mistress Galatea, he was committed to the stone-quarry. And it was there that he composed the Cyclops story to fit to his own history, modelling his Cyclops on Dionysius, his nymph Galatea on Galatea the flute-player, and Odyssens on himself.

THE DITHYRAMBS OF PHILOXENUS

Aelian Miscellanies: The Sicilian stone-quarries were situated near Epipolae, and measured two hundred yards by sixty. Some of the prisoners they contained had been there so long that they had married and got children within them, and among these were not a few who having never set eyes on a town were so amazed when they went into Syracuse and saw teams of horses driven by shouting drivers that they fled shrieking away. The best of the caves in the quarries was known as that of the poet Philoxenus, being the quarters in which he snapped his fingers at the punishment meted out to him by Dionysius, and so effectively courted the Muse in the midst of his sufferings as to compose in that prison his finest lyric poem The Cyclops.

Hermesianax Leontium [from a catalogue of love-affairs]: And the man from Cythera, whom Athens nursed and bred to be the Muses' most loyal steward of Bacchus and the flute, to wit Philoxenus, well thou knowest, Leontium, what was the wound he suffered at Ortygia ere he passed through this city,<sup>1</sup> for thou wottest of the great love wherewith Galatea inspired e'en her sheep-attendants.<sup>2</sup>

Scholiast on Theocritus: According to Duris, Polyphemus built a temple to Galatea on the side of Etna because of the excellent pasturage and the abundant supply of milk, but Philoxenus of Cythera, living there and so being unable to give a fictitious reason like that, made Polyphemus the lover of Galatea.

Didymus on Demosthenes: 'The man who came from Macedonia was so willing to take risks that in his desire to extend his rule he became maimed for life in battle against his enemies':—. . It was at the siege of Methonè that Philip lost his right eye by an arrow while he was inspecting the siege-engines. . . The story of the fluteplayer is accepted, among other historians, by Marsyas. It seems that at a musical competition held by Philip a short time before the loss of his eye, all the competing fluteplayers, by a strange coincidence, performed the Cyclops, Antigeneides that of Philoxenus, Chrysogonus that of Stesichorus, and Timotheus that of Oeniades.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: Now that our conversation has reached this point,

A song will I contribute to my love of you, in the words of the poet of Cythera.

3, 4<sup>2</sup>

Aristophanes Plutus: CARION: Yes, I'll lead you with the Cyclops' ting-a-ling and a criss-cross swing of the legs like this. Come up, my little ones, come, with cries multitudinous, chanting the bleats of sheep and malodorous goats, all rampant and gay, and you shall break your fast like he-goats.

Scholiast on the passage: (1) 'The Cyclops' ting-a-ling: . . .' this comes from the Cyclops of Philoxenus, who makes the Cyclops play the lyre . . . He is parodying Philoxenus the tragedy-writer, who introduced Polyphemus playing the lyre. The word is a sort of musical phrase and is instrumental rather than vocal. The words

Come up, my little ones, come, with cries multitudinous are from the Cyclops of Philoxenus. Philoxenus is parodied, the dithyramb-writer who wrote about the love of the Cyclops for Galatea; and he imitates the sound of the lyre in his book with the word θρεττανελό or ting-a-ling. For he introduces the Cyclops playing the lyre in order to win Galatea's affection.—(2) Philoxenus the dithyramb-writer was with Dionysius in Sicily. It is said that he once seduced a woman called Galatea who was Dionysius' mistress, and when he learnt of it Dionysius consigned him to the stone-quarry. Escaping thence he retired to the highlands of Cythera and there composed a drama called Galatea, in which he made the Cyclops Galatea's lover, thus hinting at Dionysius, whom he likened to the Cyclops, because Dionysius' sight, like his, was not of the best.

Aristophanes Plutus (continued): CHORUS: But bleating the Cyclops' ting-a-ling, we will find you, my friend, keeping your sheep all dirty and drunken with a scrip full of dewy wild potherbs, and when you've just dropped off to sleep we'll take a great burning skewer and try to put your eyes out.

Scholiast on the passage: 'With a scrip':—(1) This phrase also comes from Philoxenus; (2) here the poet playfully attacks Philoxenus' poem where he makes the Cyclops carry a scrip or wallet and eat potherbs. For that is how he dresses the man who acts the Cyclops. And Aristophanes mentions the blinding, because it is found in the work of Philoxenus . . .

Zenobius Proverbs :

With what a portent hath Heaven imprisoned me !<sup>2</sup>

The proverb is used of those who are much perturbed at some unpleasant event. The Cyclops is a drama of the poet Philoxenus in which these words are used by Odysseus when he is shut into the Cyclops' cave.

10<sup>3</sup>

Suidas Lexicon :

You sacrificed others; you shall be sacrificed yourself.

This is said by the Cyclops to Odysseus in Philoxenus. It seems that they took Homer's words 'then we kindled fire and sacrificed' to be said of the lambs and not to mean merely 'to offer firstlings.'

Scholiast on the Iliad: The mark is because θῦσαι 'to sacrifice' is not σφάζει 'to immolate' as Timotheus and Philoxenus took it in our present usual sense, but 'to make offering' simply, and because by θυηλαί are meant the offered firstlings.

THE DITHYRAMBS OF PHILOXENUS

wizard am I, who may prove a welcome aid to thee in thy so unsuccessful sea love-making. I know incantations and binding charms and philtres which Galatea can hardly withstand even for a little while. Only do thou engage to move the door aside—or rather this doorstone, which seemeth to me a very promontory—and I will subdue the maid and rejoin thee quicker than the saying of it. Subdue? nay, I will show thee herself lured hither by many a charm; and she shall be thy suppliant, and thou shalt play coy dissembler. Yet this much giveth me thought, lest the smell of the goat in the fleeces disturb a maid that lives softly and washeth herself many times a day. It were well then that thou shouldst both put all in order and sweep and wash and fumigate thy chamber, and better still if thou preparedst crowns of ivy and woodbine to crown thyself and thy love withal. O why tarriest thou? putttest thou not thy hand e'en now to the door?' At this Polyphemus burst out laughing his very loudest and clapped his hands together; and Odysseus thought he was in transports of joy at the expectation that his love should be his. But Polyphemus only chucked him under the chin and said 'Noman, thou seem'st to be a mighty shrewd manikin and well versed in the affairs of life; but now thou must fain broider thee a different robe, for from this place thou shalt not escape.' Odysseus, who was truly being wronged, was in the event, we know, to get the advantage in knavery. But you, who are a Cyclops in strength and a Sisyphus in attempt, are caught by Justice and held fast by Law, both of which you perhaps despise. Yet if you must overcome the laws altogether, I only hope I may not be the one to undo them and break down the door of the prisoner's hold . . .

12<sup>1</sup> THE SYRIAN (?)

Hesychius Glossary: μεσαύχες 'Mid-necked':—Aristophanes says 'wineskins, those mid-necked corpses.' It is to be written so with the letter  $\mu$ , μεσαύχες, because the cord tied round it squeezes the neck of the wineskin in the middle. He is parodying the phrases of Philoxenus in the Syrian. Some authorities, however, write it with the  $\delta$ , δεσαύχες 'tie-necked' and also <in the form βυσαύχες 'bung-necked'>, but incorrectly.

13<sup>1</sup> EPITHALAMY

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on gluttony]: The same story<sup>2</sup> is told of Philoxenus of Cythera . . . According to Clearchus, whether at home or abroad Philoxenus used to take a bath and then visit other people's houses accompanied by slaves carrying oil, wine, caviare, vinegar and other kinds of seasoning, dress with the required seasoning whatever was cooking for the owners, and then sink down exhausted and make a good meal on the spot. It was Philoxenus who on his arrival at Ephesus found the fishmonger's empty, and being informed, when he asked the reason, that all the fish had been bought up for a wedding, took a bath and went uninvited to the bridegroom's. When supper was over he sang—he was a dithyramb-writer—a wedding-song, that which begins

O Marriage, most famous of Gods, and captivated all hearts. When the bridegroom said 'You must sup here to-morrow too, Philoxenus,' he rejoined 'I will, if the good things aren't sold meanwhile.'

Scholiast on the passage: . . . This is directed against Philoxenus the dithyramb-writer; for the word is his.<sup>2</sup> The dithyrambic poets use compound and complex expressions, and so Aristophanes uses the same in emulation of them. Thus he makes clear the unpleasantness these authors show in their compounds owing to their disjointedness.

Palatine Anthology: Philoxenus on a statue of Hermes dedicated by Tlepolemus of Myra.<sup>3</sup>

Tlepolemus of Myra, the son of Polycrites, set up this Hermes for a starting-post<sup>4</sup> unto the runners in the sacred races, because he had been victorious after twice ten furlongs; thrust soft sluggardry from your knees, ye runners, and hie you on.<sup>5</sup> does refer to P. of Cythera it must have come only in the 2nd edition of the play, for he was only 12 in 423<sup>3</sup> the T. of Lycia of Paus. 5. 8. 11 (called 'Hippocrates son of Thessalus' in the Armenian version of Eusebius) is either a mistake or a different man; the victory there recorded under 256 B.C. was in a race ridden on colts<sup>4</sup> there is prob. a play on Hermes and herma 'post' or 'cairn'<sup>5</sup> the δόλιχος or long-race was sometimes as much as 24 furlongs; in all but the shortest race the starting-post was also the turning-post

POLYIDUS

Upon a stone found near Teos: Whereas Herodotus son of Menodotus and Meneclēs son of Dionysius have been sent ambassadors from Teos to the cities of Crete and have spent most of the time allowed them in our city, and have not only shown the good behaviour expected from visitors, but one of them, to wit Meneclēs, as became a man of culture, has given sundry tasteful performances to the lyre, as well of the works of Timotheus and Polyīdus as of our own classical poets; it is resolved by the Directors and City of Cnossus that, in order that the Teians may know that the City has accepted the embassy of the ambassadors aforesaid, thanks be tendered to the city of Teos for sending the same, and likewise to the ambassadors Herodotus and Meneclēs for their excellent behaviour during their visit.

Etymologicum Magnum: Atlas: A mountain of Libya. The dithyramb-writer Polyīdus makes him out to have been a shepherd to whom Perseus one day came and (instead of being allowed to pass) was asked by him who he was and whence he came; whereupon, being unable to gain his permission by force of words, he must needs show him the Gorgon's head and turn him to stone; and thus the mountain came to be called after him Atlas. This account is given by Lycophron in his Commentary.

who resembles me; nobody resembles me but Orestes; therefore it is he.' And there is the recognition of Iphigeneia in Polyïdus the sophist, where Orestes naturally infers that as his sister has been sacrificed so he must now share her fate.

The Same : Subjects already invented should nevertheless be sketched out in general by the poet himself before being arranged in episodes and worked out in detail. He should investigate the general plan, for example, of an Iphigeneia thus:—A young girl has been sacrificed and has then mysteriously vanished from the sight of her sacrificers and been transported to a country where it is customary to sacrifice all strangers to the God, and there become priestess. Some time afterwards her brother happens to arrive there. The fact that he has been sent there by the oracle for some reason, the purpose of his coming, is outside the story. However, he comes, is seized, and is about to be sacrificed, when he makes the recognition. This may be either in the manner of Euripides or of Polyïdus, who makes him say very naturally that it was not only his sister, then, who was to perish by sacrifice—a remark which saves his life.

on TELLES, TELLEN, or TELLIS

Plutarch Sayings of Kings [Epaminondas]: When news was brought him that the Athenians had sent a newly-equipped army into the Peloponnese, he said 'What of it? Does Antigeneidas weep and wail when Telles gets a new pair of pipes?' Now Telles was as bad a fluteplayer as Antigenidas was a good one.

Zenobius Proverbs : Sing the songs of Tellen :—the proverb is used of mockers or jesters. Tellen was a fluteplayer and lyric poet who left some sportive verse of excellent rhythm and remarkable charm, and some extremely witty jests.

The Same : This Tellen was a fluteplayer and a writer of miscellaneous lyrics, who is mentioned by Dicaearchus the Messenian.

Ptolemy son of Hephaestion : When Demetrius of Scepsis died, a copy of the works of Tellis was found beside his pillow.

TO HERMEIAS<sup>2</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [scolia or drinking-songs]: Democritus now remarked that the poem written by the most learned of men, Aristotle, to Hermeias of Atarneus, was not a paean as was asserted by Demophilus, who at the instigation of Eurymedon instituted the proceedings against the philosopher and laid the outrageous accusation of impiety, on the plea that he daily sang a paean in honour of Hermeias<sup>3</sup> at the common board of the Peripatetic School. 'As a matter of fact' said he 'the poem bears no resemblance to the paean, but is a particular kind of scolion such as we have just been discussing, and this I will show you plainly from what it says:

Virtue, laborious prize of mortals and noblest quest of life, 'tis the most enviable lot in Greece to die or suffer bitter toil unceasing for thy maiden beauty, such the heaven-rivalling fruit thou bestowest on the mind; better than gold or high birth, better than soft-eyed sleep. For thee did Heracles, for thee did those other sons of Zeus that Leda brought him, bear much in vigorous search of thy power and art; for love of thee went Ajax and Achilles to the house of Death; and now for thy loved beauty Atarneus' nursling<sup>1</sup> hath made the sun's light desolate. Therefore shall the Daughters of Memory cry him famous for his deeds and to live evermore, and magnify the God of Host and Guest and extol true friendship.

Now I do not know whether anyone can see anything here characteristic of the paean. The writer clearly admits that Hermeias is dead . . . , and there is no paeanic refrain as there is in the real paean to the Spartan Lysander which, in his book entitled Annals of Samos, Duris declares is sung in that city . . . And moreover Aristotle says himself, in his Defence from the Accusation of Impiety—if the speech is genuine—"If I had intended to sacrifice to Hermeias as an immortal being I should not have built him the tomb of a mortal, nor if I had wished to make him a God should I have honoured his remains with funeral obsequies."

HERMOLOCHUS (?)

Stobaeus Anthology [that life is short, of little account, and full of care]: Hermolochus :<sup>2</sup>

All life is inscrutable, wandering amid events with nothing sure. 'Tis hope cheers on the heart; no man born knoweth certainly whither he goes; and often enough there bloweth a dire wind contrary to success. Yet in danger and calamity God is ever at the helm.

LYCOPHRONIDES

1

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on love]: According to the 1st Book of the Erotics of Clearchus, Lycophronides truly says:

Neither in lad nor golden lass<sup>1</sup> nor yet in buxom dame is the face fair which is not modest, for beauty is engendered of a proper shame.

2<sup>2</sup>

Clearchus in the Same [why, when a man's wreath comes apart, we say he is in love]: Or is it rather that lovers are betrayed by their passion into despoiling themselves of a bodily adornment to dedicate it to one who has despoiled them, as they rightly think, of a spiritual? That is what every lover does if the beloved be there; and if not, he dedicates it to whoever is—which is the reason why Lycophronides makes his lovesick goatherd say:

This rose, with my cap and shoes and game-slaying javelins, is my fair offering to thee,<sup>3</sup> though my thoughts lie elsewhere, to wit on the lass Acacallis whom the Graces love so well.

The following passages refer to poets of whom some certainly and all possibly come within the scope of this book

on XENOCRITUS and XENODAMUS

Heracleides of Pontus [on Locri]: Xenocritus, a poet blind from his birth, was a Locrian.

MYIA

Plutarch Music: The second establishment of music at Sparta is best ascribed to Thaletas of Gortyn, Xenodamus of Cythera, Xenocritus of Locri, Polymnastus of Colophon and Sacadas of Argos . . . Thaletas, Xenodamus, and Xenocritus were composers of paeans . . . though according to some authorities, as for instance Pratinas, Xenodamus composed hyporchemes and not paeans. There is actually a song of Xenodamus' on record, which is obviously a hyporcheme . . . As to Xenocritus, who was by birth of Locri in Italy, it is questioned whether or no he was a composer of paeans, because we are told that he wrote poems on 'heroic' subjects, and that some writers therefore called his works dithyrambs. According to Glaucus, Thaletas was an older contemporary of Xenocritus.<sup>1</sup>

Plutarch Music: We are told that the last lyrist to win the prize for lyre-song at the Spartan Carneia was a Lesbian called Pericleitus; <sup>2</sup> his death put an end to the continuous succession of Lesbian singers to the lyre. Some writers are mistaken in making Hipponax a contemporary of Terpander. The truth would appear to be that he comes later even than Pericleitus.

on MYIA

Suidas Lexicon: Myia:—A Spartan poetess Hymns to Apollo and Artemis.

THEANO

on MYNNA (?)

on THEANO

Suidas Lexicon: Theano:—A lyric poetess, of Locri. Locrian songs and lyric poems.

Eustathius on the Iliad: According to the old writers there was also a Theano of Locri, who was a lyric poetess.<sup>2</sup>

Theano was the first writer of poetry

Zenobius Proverbs: 'And now, ye blessed Gods'; this is the epilogue of the rhapsodes or reciters of epic verse; compare the phrase used by the singers to the lyre:

But all hail, O Lord.<sup>2</sup>

Eustathius on the Iliad: It should be noted that from this phrase 'But, O Lord' comes as a beginning of an exodium or end-piece in singing to the lyre the words 'But, O Lord . . .',<sup>3</sup> as we are told by Aelius Dionysius.

The Same: The foot which consists entirely of short syllables and is called by some writers the Tribach, of which the following is an example: is mean and undignified and ignoble, and can be used to compose nothing that is noble.

Dinning, spear-bearing, furious, war-clattered,
Father Ares

98

The Same: The foot which is made of a long and two shorts and has the long in the middle is called the Amphibrach, and is not a particularly beautiful rhythm, being enervating and smacking strongly of the effeminate and ignoble; for instance

99

The Same: The writers on rhythm, however, declare that the long of the Dactyl is shorter than a full long, and being unable to say by how much, they call it 'irrational.' There is another foot having the converse rhythm to this, which begins with the shorts and ends with the irrational. This they distinguish from the Anapaest and call it 'cyclic,' giving the following example:

The high-gated city lies scattered o'er the ground.

100

The Same [the Cretic]: If the two longs come at the beginning and the short at the end, like this:

who shares altars with thee, O Phoebus, and the

we have a manly type of rhythm suitable to the dignified style.

that 'crowd of the unco' wise,' those 'subtle thinkers beggars after all,'<sup>1</sup> and others galore, are proofs of an ancient feud. Nevertheless we will admit once for all that if the poetry whose end is to please, and by that I mean all 'imitation' or art-representation of the sort, could give reason to prove that she had a proper place in a well-constituted state, we, at any rate, should welcome her back with open arms, because we know what an effect she has upon us; but till then, as religious men, we cannot betray what seems to us the truth.

Plato Letters: This poem, too, is approved by sensible men:

Not glorious gold so rare in this mortal life of disappointment, nor diamonds, nor silver couches, shine in the eyes in comparison of a man, nor are the rich-laden self-sufficient fields of the wide-set earth of such account as the unanimous thinking of good men and true.

123

Stobaeus Selections [on Fortune or Chance]:

Fortune, beginning and end of mortal man, thou sittest in the seats of wisdom and puttest price on<sup>2</sup> human deeds. More good than ill comes of thee, and grace shineth around thy golden wing. That which is given of thy scales turns out the happiest; thou findest a way out amid the woes of perplexity, and leadest like a light shining in the darkness, thou most excellent of Gods.

[ARION'S] HYMN TO POSEIDON

Aelian On Animals: That dolphins have a natural liking for singing and the flute, witness Arion of Methymna by token of the statue <sup>2</sup> at Cape Taenarum and the inscription thereon, which runs 'By immortal guidance this equipage saved Arion son of Cycleus from the Sicilian main.' The hymn of thanksgiving to Poseidon which testifies to the dolphins' love of music was composed by Arion <sup>3</sup> as a meed of gratitude not only to him but to them. It is as follows:

Chiefest of Gods, sea-lord Poseidon of the trident of gold, earth-shaking king of the swelling <sup>4</sup> brine, the beasts that swim dance all about thee with fins, and lightly bound with nimble flingings of the foot, the snub-nosed coursing hounds of bristling mane, the dolphin-lovers of the Muse, sea-creatures of Nereus' goddess-daughters that he had of Amphitrite, the beasts that bore a wanderer on the Sicilian sea to Taenarum's shore in Pelops' land, ploughing the untrodden furrow of Nereus' field astride their humpèd back, when crafty men had cast me from out the hollow wave-going ship into the sea-purple billows of the ocean.

Thus, in addition to the characteristics mentioned above, it is clear that dolphins are fond of music.

Aristoxenus Elements of Rhythm [the 'three-beat' cadence] It may also occur in the Iambic-Dactyl,<sup>1</sup> the syllables concerned being reversed as regards the Cretic with reference to the beats.<sup>2</sup> The metrical basis will be the iambus, thus:

there immortal meads of varied flowers take to their embrace beside an umbrageous grove dancing throngs of dainty Bacchic maids.<sup>3</sup>

In this passage the first five feet, and later a group of three, employ the cadence as has been described. Again:

whoso delights in good cheer and a dance—

But this type of verse does not employ the rhythm at all frequently . . . (The Baccheic type, as it is called)<sup>4</sup> varies its rhythm in the line:

beloved darling of the Seasons, respite to man from his labour<sup>5</sup>—

Three such feet sometimes occur together:

The great God that is child of a pure mother whom Cadmus once begot in rich and wealthy Thebes<sup>6</sup>—

The same cadence may occur in the Iambus, though with less grace than in the Baccheus; for the single beat is more suitable to the trochaic measure than to the Iambus. For instance, in the lines:

Hither, come hither, ye maids, make haste to the front. Who can that maiden be? How gracefully about her hangs—

the 'syzygy,' or extra lengthening of a syllable, occurs at intervals of three feet, so as to produce a kind of period.

TO FORTUNE OR CHANCE

From a Fourth-Century Papyrus:

Wing-sandalled being of many hands and varied shape, housemate of man, almighty Fortune, how should thy strength and excellence be told? That which shines proudly on high, comes it but within thy ken, thou rendest privily and scatterest on the ground in a murky cloud,<sup>1</sup> and what is mean and lowly, that, O great deity, oftentime thou dost raise aloft. Whether shall we call thee black Clotho or fleet-fate Necessity, or art thou Iris, the messenger 'twixt Gods and men? ### INTRODUCTION

Pollux Onomasticon : Songs to the Gods are called in general paeans or hymns, in particular a hymn to Artemis is known as οὔπιγγος, to Apollo as the paeon. Both these are addressed in processional songs, Dionysus in the dithyramb, Demeter in the ἰουλος. The Linus and Lityerses are the songs of delvers and husbandmen.

Herodotus Histories [Argè and Opis] : For according to them the women go begging gifts for them, calling upon their names in the hymn composed for them by a Lycian named Olen . . . This Olen it was who came from Lycia and composed this and the other ancient hymns that are sung at Delos.

Callimachus Hymn to Delos : The men sing the song of the Lycian ancient, the song the prophet Olen brought from the bank of Xanthus, and the maidens that dance to them beat with their feet the stable earth.

Iliad : All the day long they worshipped the God<sup>1</sup> with music, singing the beautiful Paeon, these sons of the Achaeans, making music to the Far-darter; and his heart rejoiced to hear them.<sup>2</sup>

FOLK-SONGS : INTRODUCTION

Iliad [the Shield of Achilles]: And therein he made two fair cities of mortal men; in the one were weddings and feasts, and they led the brides from their chambers amid the light of torches through the town, and loud rose the bridal song. Young men whirled in the dance, and flute and lyre cried aloud among them, while the women stood each at her door marvelling at them.<sup>1</sup>

Hesiod [the Shield of Heracles]: And on the other side was a rout of young men with flutes playing, some frolicking with dance and song, others laughing, each and all in time with the flute-player as they went along.

Plutarch Life of Alcibiades: The motion was carried and all was ready for the sailing of the expedition,<sup>2</sup> when there befel unfavourable portents, not least that of the feast of Adonis, which falling at this time, in many places images were set out like corpses for burial by the Athenian women, who beat their breasts and sang dirges in mimic funeral rites.

Aeschylus Libation-Bearers :

ELECTRA : I made lament in Arian<sup>3</sup> wise, or to the tunes of the Cissian<sup>3</sup> mourner; aye, then behold hands outstretched one after other, striking desperately, wandering wildly, upward, downward, my miserable stricken head ringing again to their beat.

him upon a fretted bed and set beside it minstrels for to lead the dirge, the which did make lament of mournful song, while the women wailed in answer to them.

The Same [the Shield of Achilles]: And lasses and lads in childish glee carried the honey-sweet fruit<sup>1</sup> in plaited baskets, while in their midst a boy did harp delightfully upon a sweet clear lute, and sang the fair Song of Linus<sup>2</sup> in a piping voice, the rest following with dancing feet that kept time with his playing and his song.

Scholiast on the passage ['sang the fair song of Linus']: . . . that is the song first sung in honour of Linus the darling of Apollo, a little boy who was torn in pieces by sheep-dogs . . . but Aristarchus says that it is a sort of hymn, as if he said 'sang a paean' or the like.

Callixeinus of Rhodes [the festal procession of Philadelphus]: There were sixty Satyrs treading the grapes, singing to the flute the Song of the Winepress, with Silenus for their overseer.

Longus Daphnis and Chloe: Displaying all the art of pastoral music, he showed upon the pipe what notes were fit for the herds of cows and oxen, what agreed with the flocks of goats, what were pleasing to the sheep.<sup>3</sup>

The Same: But Dryas, rising and bidding him pipe a Dionysiac tune, fell to dancing before them the Dance of the Winepress. And now he acted to the life the cutting and gathering of the grapes, now the carrying of the baskets, then the treading of the grapes in the press, then presently the tunning of the wine into the butts, and then again their joyful and hearty carousing the must. All these things he represented so aptly and clearly in his dancing, that they all thought they verily saw before their face the vines, the grapes, the press, the butts, and that Dryas did drink indeed.<sup>1</sup>

The Same: And when they had made a libation from the bowl to Dionysus, they fell to their meat, with ivy crowns upon their heads. And when it was time, having cried the Iacchus and Euoe, they sent Daphnis away.<sup>1</sup>

The Same: They sang, too, certain songs in the praise of the Nymphs, the solemn carmens of the ancient shepherds.<sup>1</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: In the second Book of his Appellations Tryphon gives the following list of the different kinds of song: 'The Himaëus is the Mill-song, which they sang as they ground the corn.<sup>2</sup> The word perhaps comes from himalis, which in Doric means the "return" or over-measure of wheat-flour.<sup>3</sup> The Weavers' song is known as Elinus,<sup>4</sup> as we know from Epicharmus' Atalantæ. This is the ἰουλος of the spinners.'<sup>5</sup> To quote Semus the Delian's work On Paeans: 'The trusses or handfuls of barley were known individually as ἀμάλαι; collectively a bunch of trusses was called οὐλος or ἰουλος; and Demeter was known sometimes as Chloë, sometimes as Iūlo.

FOLK-SONGS: INTRODUCTION

Thus both the corn and the hymns to the Goddess are called οὔλοι or ἰουλοι from the inventions of Demeter.' The same word comes in the compounds δημήτρονλος and καλλιίουλος, and also in the song 'A sheaf, a sheaf, send, send a great sheaf.'<sup>1</sup> But according to other authorities the word means a Spinning-song. Nursing-songs are called καταβαυκαλήσεις or Lullabies. There was also a song sung to Erigonè at the Swing-Feast, called the ἀλῆτις or Wandering-song. Compare Aristotle in the Constitution of Colophon: 'Theodorus himself came later to a violent end. He seems to have been a luxurious liver, to judge by his poetry, for even to this day the women sing his songs over the swings.' The Reaping-song is called Lityerses. And according to Telecleides' Amphictyons there was a song of the hired labourers who went out to the farms, and others, as Crates tells us in his Daring Deeds, of the bathmen, and yet another, according to Aristophanes' Thesmophoriazusae<sup>2</sup> and Nicocharēs' Heracles as Chorus-Leader, of the women who winnow the corn. Moreover the tenders of cattle and sheep had a song, the βουκολιασμός or Herding-song. The inventor of this was a Sicilian oxherd called Diomus, who is mentioned in the Halcyon and Odysseus Shipwrecked of Epicharmus. The song sung at deaths and in mourning is called the ὀλοφυρμός or Wailing. The songs called ἰουλοι belong to Demeter and Persephonè. The song to Apollo is called the Phileliad or Sun-loving, as is shown by Telesilla; and the songs to Artemis are known as οὔπιγγοι. At Athens they used to sing over the wine the Laws of

FOLK-SONGS : INTRODUCTION

Charondas, as we learn from the sixth Book of Hermippus' work On the Lawgivers. In his Atticisms Aristophanes [of Byzantium] states: 'The Himaëus is the song of the millers;<sup>1</sup> the Hymenæus is the song sung at weddings; in mourning they sang the Ialemus or Lament; the Linus and Ailinos were sung not only on occasions of mourning, but also, in Euripides' phrase, "for the singing of prosperity."' "

In the first Book of his Erotica Clearchus says that there was a certain song called Nomian<sup>2</sup> which originated with Eriphanis, and he tells the tale as follows: 'The lyric poetess Eriphanis, becoming enamoured of Menalcas when he was out hunting, turned hunter too and pursued him with her love. Like Io in the story they say she wandered to and fro through all the mountain woods, till not only the most phlegmatic of men, but the fiercest beasts, wept with her and understood the longings of her heart. And thus it was that she composed, they say, the so-called Nomian or Pastoral Song, crying aloud and singing it while she wandered in the wilds; from this song comes the line "The oaks grow high, Menalcas."' " To quote the fourth Book of Aristoxenus On Music, 'In former times the women had a song called Calycè. It was a poem of Stesichorus, in which a maiden of this name prayed to Aphrodite that she might be wedded to a youth called Euathlus, and when he flouted her threw herself over a cliff. The scene was laid near Leucas. The poet gave the maiden a very virtuous character; for she had no wish that she and the youth should come together at all hazards, but prayed that she might if possible be his wedded wife, or failing that might die.'<sup>1</sup> We are told by Aristoxenus in his Brief Notes that, Iphiclus spurning her affection, Harpalycè died, and the maidens made a song-competition in her honour, called after her the Harpalycè. We read in the first Book of Nymphis' Heraclea, where he is speaking of the Mariandyni, 'Similarly we may notice some of the songs, which at a feast that it is their custom to celebrate they sing when they invoke a person of ancient times whom they address as Bormus. This was the son, they say, of a man wealthy and distinguished, a youth of surpassing beauty and vigour, who, when superintending the work on his farm, went in quest of water for his reapers and disappeared. Accordingly the inhabitants of the district went in search of him with a kind of dirge or invocation set to music, which the whole people sing to the present day. A similar kind of song is the Maneros, as it is called, of the Egyptians.'

Pollux Onomasticon [poems]: . . . the various forms of ἰουλος, οὐλαμος, and οὐπιγγος, the Linus, the Song of the Mill, and the Himaëus or Himalis, of which the singer was called ἱμαοιδός.<sup>2</sup> There was also the Borimus, the song of the Mariandynian farmers, corresponding to the Egyptian Maneros and the Phrygian Lityersas. This Maneros was the Egyptian inventor of husbandry, a pupil of the Muses; and Lityersas was the same among the Phrygians. Of the latter we are told that he was a son of Midas who used to challenge the reapers to a reaping-match and give the losers the whip, but met his death at the hands of one that was stronger, who some say was Heracles. The dirge, which was sung at the threshing-floors and the mowing, was to console his father. Borimus was a brother of Iollas and Mariandynus and son of king Upius who died young when hunting at harvest-time. He is commemorated in a dirge-like song about husbandry. There was also a song known as Aletis, sung over the swings; this was the work of Theodorus of Colophon. And there was a Flute-piece of the Winepress, for the treading of the grapes; and another for the Winnowing, which is referred to by the comedy-writer Phrynichus in his Revellers, thus:

I'll whistle for us a winnowing-song;

and by Nicophon in his Hand to Belly in the line:

But come you and play us a winnowing on your flute.

And there were flute-tunes for rowers also, and for shepherds. Epicharmus mentions a Shepherding-tune, and Plato the comedy-writer a tune for the Herding of Swine . . .<sup>1</sup> And according to Aristotle the Etruscans not only box but even flog and cook to the sound of the flute.

Callimachus Hecale: For already the lamps of dawn are shining, and I warrant some water-drawer is singing the Himaëus.

feast, nothing but georgics, nothing but what was rustical was there. Here one sang like the reapers, there another prattled it and flung flirts and scoffs as in the autumn from the press. Philetas played upon his pipes, Lampis upon the hautboy. Dryas and Lamo danced to them.<sup>1</sup>

The Same :<sup>1</sup> Then, when it was night, they all lead the bride and bridegroom to the chamber, some playing upon whistles and hautboys, some upon the oblique pipes, some holding great torches. And when they came near to the door they fell to singing, and sang with the grating harsh voices of rustics, nothing like the Hymenaeus, but as if they had been singing at their labour with mattock and hoe.<sup>2</sup>

Scholiast on Theocritus The Reapers ['Come, hear this of the divine Lityerses']: By this he means 'Hear this tragedy [sic] of mine, which I am about to sing concerning Lityerses'; now this Lityerses, who lived at Celaenae in Phrygia, used to compel passing strangers after feasting at his table to reap with him, and when evening came would cut off their heads, and binding the trunk into a sheaf with the trusses of corn, would sing a song; but he was eventually slain by Heracles and thrown into the river Maeander. Which is why in Phrygia to this day the reapers sing his praise as a champion reaper.<sup>3</sup>

Aristophanes Clouds: But he said at once that it was old-fashioned to sing and play after supper like a wench grinding barleycorns.

FOLK-SONGS : INTRODUCTION

The Same Frogs: What's the meaning of this phlattothrat? Was it at Marathon, or where was it, that you picked up the songs of a water-drawer?

Scholiast on the passage: That is, songs of a rope-winder, such as a man might sing drawing water from a well. It seems that ἰμονία is the name of the well-rope, and the song sung by the drawers is called Himaeus. Compare Callimachus (above, p. 503).

Odyssey [Calypso]: And within, going before the loom, she plied a golden shuttle, singing the while with a sweet voice.<sup>1</sup>

Eratosthenes in Etymologicum Magnum: The hired Dandaetian (?) weaving-woman sang fair Songs of the Skein as she went to and fro beneath the lofty gate-house.

Longus Daphnis and Chloe: . . . they saw a fisherman's boat come by. The wind was down, the sea was smooth, and there was a great calm. Wherefore when they saw there was need of rowing, they fell to plying the oars stoutly. For they made haste to bring in some fresh fish from the sea to fit the palate of one of the richer citizens of Mytilene. That therefore which other mariners use to elude the tediousness of labour, these began, and held on as they rowed along. There was one among them that was the boatswain, and he had certain sea-songs. The rest like a chorus all together strained their throats to a loud holla, and caught his voice at certain intervals.<sup>2</sup>

TO GODS

1 To ARTEMIS<sup>1</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: There were some musical instruments besides those of wind and string, producing merely noise, for instance the κρέμβαλα or castanets. These are mentioned by Dicaearchus in his Life in Greece, where he says that certain instruments which made a piercing sound when touched by the fingers were much used by women in certain parts of Greece to accompany dance and song; and he compares the Artemis-Song beginning:

My heart bids me utter a hymn that shall please thee, O Artemis, if e'er before thou hast had delight of a damsel all bright with gold, who clasheth brazen-cheeked crembals in her hands.

2 To ARTEMIS

Theodoret ['Ahaz made his son to pass through the fire']: In certain cities I have seen fires lit once a year in the streets, and people leaping over them, not only children but grown men, and even babes passed through the flame. It seemed to be an averting or purifying rite.

Hesychius Glossary:

Opis Queen, fire by the door;<sup>2</sup>

that is, fire before the doors; in some parts they draw Hecate to their houses by spells.<sup>3</sup>

3 To APHRODITE

Plutarch Dinner Table Problems: Our company includes not only young married men who perform 'Love's rites' as in duty bound, but us older folk from whom Aphrodite has not yet fled for good and all, and who can still, I think, pray to her in one of the Hymns to the Gods:<sup>1</sup>

Put off old age for many a year, O beautiful Aphrodite.

4 To DIONYSUS

Plutarch Greek Questions: Why do the Eleian women in their hymn to Dionysus invoke him to come to them 'with foot of ox'? The hymn is as follows:

Come, hero Dionysus, to the shrine of the Eleans, to the pure shrine with the Graces, raging hither with foot of ox, goodly Bull, O goodly Bull.

Pausanias Description of Greece: Dionysus is one of the Gods most highly venerated by the Eleans, who declare that he visits their city at the Feast of Thyia.<sup>2</sup>

5-7 To DIONYSUS

Scholiast on Aristophanes Frogs: In the Lenaeon Festival of Dionysus the torchbearer link in hand cries

Call the God ;

and his hearers shout

in Samos) <sup>2</sup> this word seems to have been connected with θύω 'to rage or rush furiously,' cf. 'raging hither' above; Paus. goes on to tell of the miraculous filling of sealed wine-jars overnight which took place at the festival; in this very ancient invocation D. is still a 'hero' and a bull

FOLK-SONGS: TO GODS

Or the reference may be to what is said at a sacrifice.
After the libation has been made they say

It is poured ; call the God.

8-9<sup>1</sup>

Aristophanes Peace: Let us pray ; 'who is here?' where are the 'many good men'?

Scholiast on the passage: (1) When pouring a libation they used to say meaning Who is present? and then the company would reply religioso:

Many good men.<sup>2</sup>

This was done by those who were pouring a libation, so that anyone who felt himself unfit to take part might withdraw. (2) Trygaeus says the words 'where are?' in character [i.e. they are not part of the quotation]—'where are the people who respond?' so that they may make a plausible reply, or else because nobody present was a real gentleman [lit. noble and good].

10, 11 To DIONYSUS

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: According to Semus of Delos in his treatise *On Paean*s 'The Improvisers as they were called used to recite at a slow pace and wreathed with ivy. At a later period they received the name of Iambi, a name also given to their poems. The Ithyphalli wear masks depicting them as drunken men, and wreaths over them, and flowered gloves or sleeves ; their tunics are shot with white, and they are girt about with a Tarentine robe which envelops them down to the ankles. They enter in silence by way of the pylon, and when they arrive in the middle of the orchestra, they turn to the audience with the words:—

Make way ho! for the God; he would fain walk through the midst in all his vigour.

The Phallophori on the other hand wear no masks, but put on a vizor of thyme and lad's-love and above it a thick crown of violets and ivy, and come before the audience in plaids, some proceeding from the wings and others by way of the middle doors, moving in time and saying

This music we adorn for thee, O Bacchus, pouring forth a simple lilt of varied melody, fresh and maiden, never used in earlier songs; for the hymn we begin is pure and undefiled.

15

Scholiast on Pindar Pythians [on the word ὑποκουρίζεσθαι, of which the usual meaning is ‘to address like a child or in endearing terms’]: (1) Here used to mean ‘to sport and dance’ ; or to sing the praises of the κόροι, that is the bride and bridegroom. (2) He uses this phrase because the singers sang in their ‘blessing’ ‘With both boys and girls.’ And Aeschylus says in the Danaïds ‘And then will rise the bright light of the sun, so that I may waken bridegrooms made gracious by the songs of those who have put them ‘with [i.e. made them fathers—to be—of] both boys and girls.’

(Deubner Herm. 48. 303) bears the same relation to κορώνη as χελι- to χελώνη in 33 below (as russ to cat, a voc. sometimes used to form a sort of compound with the nom., cf. russy-cat, baa-lamb? but cf. Ar. Lys. 350 ἄνδρες πονωπόνη- ροι); ἔκ may be (1) an exclamation 'ho!' i.e. 'come hither,' though Lat. ecce is prob. not cognate, or (2) the preposition used adverbially, meaning either 'avaunt' (which hardly suits l. 2) or 'emerge,' i.e. from the womb (for ἔκ not ἐξ cf. ἐκκαίδεκα); the other readings are prob. due partly to folk-etymology and partly to ms-corruption

OTHER RITUAL FOLK-SONGS

And not only in literature but in life, some people when exhorting the newly-married pair, instead of ἀκορεῖ κόρας κορωνᾶς (which contains the word 'girls') say ἐκκόρει κόρους κορώνας (which contains the word 'boys').<sup>1</sup>

Horapollo Hieroglyphics [on crows]: Even to this day, because of this mutual affection between mated crows, the Greeks say to the bride at a wedding εὖ κορί κορί κορόνῃ [Come here pretty crow ?] without knowing what it means.

Hesychius Glossary κουρίζομενος: This means 'having the wedding song sung to one,' because they said to girls being married 'with both boys and girls'; which now is corrupted to ἐκκορεῖν 'sweep out' [or 'supply well']?<sup>2</sup>

Aelian Natural History: I understand that at a wedding too the ancients, after singing the wedding-song, invoked the Crow, thus presenting the newly-married pair with a token of mutual affection, for the begetting of children.

Ho, pretty crow, pretty crow !
And bring both boys and girls !<sup>3</sup>

16<sup>4</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: The loaf named ἀχαῖρας is mentioned by Semus in the 8th Book of his *Delia*d, where he says that such loaves were made by the Thesmophori. They are large loaves, and the feast is called Megalartia or Great-Loafings, the people who carry them crying—

Bite a great-loaf full of fat.

Plutarch Life of Theseus: After he had buried his father, Theseus paid his vows to Apollo on the seventh day of Pyanopsion, which was the day on which they went up to Athens after their safe return.<sup>1</sup> Now the custom of boiling pulse (on that day) is said to have come from the rescued youths<sup>2</sup> having mixed together their remaining provisions in a common boiling-pot and made merry over it at a common board. The Eiresionè which is carried at the same festival is an olive-branch wreathed with wool, such as Theseus used for his supplication,<sup>3</sup> and laden with all sorts of fruit-offerings in token that the dearth was over, and those who carry it sing: 'Eiresionè, etc.' But according to some authorities the rite commemorates the children of Heracles who were thus brought up by the Athenians. The former explanation, however, is more generally given.

Aristophanes Knights: What's all this shouting? go away from the door. You've torn my Eiresionè all to shreds.

Scholiast on the passage: (a) The Eiresionè was an olive-branch bound round with fillets of wool, with all kinds of fruits in season fastened to it. They set it up before their doors to this day. This is done in accordance with an ancient oracle, which when the Pythian Apollo was consulted about a world-wide famine—or, as some authorities declare, a plague—, directed the Athenians to celebrate a fore-tillage sacrifice on behalf of the world in general. This they did and the visitation ceased. And so it was that firstlings of all fruits were sent to the Athenians from all parts as a thank-offering. . . . And this is why, to the present day, when they set up the branch they say:

Eiresionè brings figs and fat loaves and honey in the pot, oil to wipe from the body, and a cup of neat liquor to send her to bed drunk.

(b) The Athenians hold to the Sun and the Seasons festivals called Pyanepsia and Thargelia.<sup>4</sup> At these the children carry the boughs wreathed with the wool which gives them their name eiresionae,<sup>5</sup> and hang them before the house-doors. The 'seasons'<sup>6</sup> are fastened to the boughs.

festivals were held in Oct.—Nov. and May—June respectively

Eustathius on the Iliad: The Eiresionè is an olive-bough wreathed with wool and having various fruits of the earth attached to it. It is carried by a boy whose parents are both living, and set before the doors of the temple of Apollo at the Pyanepsia<sup>1</sup> . . . It was sometimes done to avert famine. And children sang as follows: 'Eiresionè, etc.' After the festival is over . . .<sup>2</sup> they set it beside the door. Crates declares in his treatise On the Festivals at Athens that a suppliant bough wreathed with wool was once dedicated to Apollo when the city was afflicted with famine.

Introduction to Theocritus [the invention of pastoral poetry]: At Syracuse once, when, after many of the citizens had perished in civil strife, unity was re-established, it was believed that the discord had been the work of Artemis. The peasants accordingly now brought offerings and joyfully sang the Goddess' praises, and the people afterwards made those songs permanent and customary. It seems that they sang them equipped with a loaf bearing several animal-shapes, a wallet full of mixed seeds, and some wine in a goatskin, making libations for anyone they met, with a garland about them and the antlers of a stag on their heads, and in their hands a hare-stick or hurlbat. The winner received the loaf carried by the loser, and remained at Syracuse while his defeated antagonists went round the neighbouring villages begging food. The various songs sung by these peasants were full of fun and play and ended with the following blessing:

Receive the good luck, receive the good health, which we bring from the Goddess for the gifts she hath had of you.

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: According to Hagnocles of Rhodes in his Crowmen, the people who went round begging for the Crow were called Crowmen . . . and their songs Crow-songs. Another begging song is that of the Swallow, which is sung in Rhodes, and of which Theognis writes as follows in the 2nd Book of his Rhodian Festivals: 'There is a kind of begging-round which the Rhodians call the Swallow-Round, which takes place in the month of Boëdromion,<sup>2</sup> and receives its name because it is the custom to beg to the following song:

See! see! the swallow is here!
She brings a good season, she brings a good year;
White is her breast and black her crest;
See, the swallow is here.

Ho! roll a fruit-cake from your well-filled cot,
Of cheese a fair round, of wine a full pot;
Porridge she'll take, and a bite of hardbake;
She never despises good cheer.

Go we away empty to-day?
An thou wilt give us, we'll up and away;
But an thou deny us, O here we shall stay.

Shall we take your door and your lintel also,
Shall we take the good wife that is sitting below?
She's not so tall but we'll lift her and all—
We can easily bear her away. [Over

OCCUPATIONAL SONGS

Scholiast on Apollonius of Rhodes Argonautica: The word ιουλος is used to mean the first growth of the hair of the chin. Eratosthenes however, in the Hermes, makes it the name of a spinning-song: 'The hireling spinning-woman on the lofty gate-house sang pretty ιουλοι as she made barley-cakes.'<sup>2</sup> But according to Didymus this is incorrect, and the ιουλος is a hymn to Demeter like the Troezenian οὔπιγγος to Artemis. It seems that οὔλος or ιουλος is the sheaf and Οὔλω (Oulo) is a name of Demeter.

Semus in Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner (seep. 494 above): Thus both the corn and the hymns to the Goddess are called οὔλοι or ιουλοι from the inventions of Demeter. The same word comes in the compounds δημήτρουλος (οὔλος of Demeter) and καλλιίουλος (οὔλος beautiful) and also in the song:

A sheaf, a sheaf, send, send a great sheaf.<sup>3</sup>

But according to other authorities the word means a spinning-song.

26<sup>4</sup>

Plutarch Symposium of the Seven Wise Men: The argument having interrupted the drinking, Thales waggishly observed that Epimenides was quite right to be unwilling to annoy other people by grinding and baking his own food like Pittacus. 'I heard my hostess,' said he, 'singing over the millstone when I was at Eresus

Grind, mill, grind;
E'en Pittacus once ground with thee,

27<sup>1</sup>

Scholiast on Aeschylus [the Mariandynian mourner]: According to Callistratus in the 3rd Book of his work On Heracleia, Tityus had three sons, Priolas, Mariandynus, and Bormus, of whom the last was killed out hunting, and is mourned to this day by the Mariandynians at midsummer, and the second made great improvements in lamentational flute-song and was the teacher of Hyagnis father of Marsyas. There are certain flutes, called Mariandynian, particularly suited to accompanying laments, and the saying

He plays the Mariandynian pipes in the Ionian mode

28<sup>2</sup>

Dio Chrysostom [on the ideal king]: The only song he will sing or listen to will be of the loud and piercing sort suitable to the War-God, the sort that does not suggest to the hearers ease and pleasure, but rather irresistible terror and confusion . . . and moreover, I think, the hortatory song, like that of the Spartan march-songs, so suitable to the constitution of Lysurgus and the institutions of that city:

Forward, ye sons of sires that dwelt in a town of brave men; hold in your left hand the protecting shield and cast the spear stoutly before you, with no thought for your life, for to spare that was never Sparta's way.

Scholiast on the passage: Hortatory lines from the poems of Tyrtaeus.<sup>3</sup>

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner [on dances]: One of the dances of private life was that known as Flowers. This they danced with suitable gestures to the following words:

Where are my roses, where are my violets,
And where is my fine parsley?
—Here are your roses, here are your violets,
And here is your fine parsley.

Pollux Onomasticon: There are also other games, In-the-Pot, Copper-Fly, Shine-out-my-good-Sun, Grope-i'-the-Lees, Cockchafer, Turtle-turtle, Cross-finger, Kick-Bottom, Five-Stones, Avaunt-Apple-nymphs-avaunt-Pomegranates-avaunt-Ash-nymphs, Slap-the-Poppy, Love-in Absence, Lilies, Flip-the-Pip, Heel-Taps, Hoodman-blind. In the game called In-the-Pot, one player clasps his hands behind him and carries another kneeling on them, the latter putting his hands on the former's eyes. This game is also known as Horses or Wallets. In Copper-Fly, one child has a handkerchief tied over his eyes and turns round and round crying

I go a-hunting a Copper Fly;
and the others answer

Hunt you may, but you'll never come nigh, and strike him with whips of papyrus till he catches one of them.<sup>1</sup> In Shine-out-my-good-Sun the children clap their hands to this refrain when a cloud passes over the sun. Compare Strattis in the Phoenician Women: 'And more, the sun obeys the children when they say

Shine out my good Sun.'

The object of Grope-i'-the-Lees is simply fun. Something is put at the bottom of a pan, and the player has to get it out with his mouth, his hands being behind him. The Cockchafer or μηλολάνθη is a winged creature also called μηλολόνθη, which comes either out of the apple-blossom or with it. To this creature they tie a thread and then let it go, and the beetle spins round and round in its flight. This is what Aristophanes seems to refer to (Clouds 763), where he says 'with its foot tied to a thread like a cockchafer.' Turtle-turtle is a girls' game something like Pots.<sup>2</sup> One girl sits down—she is called Turtle, while the others run round her asking<sup>3</sup>

Turtle-turtle, what dost thou there?

and she replies

I'm weaving a weft of Milesian rare.

And then they cry again

And how comes thy bantling a corpse for to be?

and she answers

He drove a white horse and went splash in the sea.<sup>4</sup>

Crossfinger is played as follows, etc.

LOVE-SONGS

the field, and he asked him if he would watch the fight. 'Yes' said the boy and put on his helmet for him with a kiss. Whereupon Cleomachus proudly assembled the best men of his squadron and, sallying forth in his might, attacked the enemy with such vigour as to throw their horse into confusion and put them to flight. The infantry now followed them, and the Chalcidians won an overwhelming victory, though unfortunately Cleomachus was killed. His tomb is shown in his allies' marketplace, where the great pillar stands to this day, and the Chalcidians thenceforward held in notable regard a form of affection which they had before disapproved. According to Aristotle,<sup>1</sup> however, though it is true Cleomachus lost his life in this victorious battle against the Eretrians, the man who was kissed by his friend was a Chalcidian of Thrace who was sent to fight for the Chalcidians of Euboea, and is commemorated by them in these lines :

Ye lads that have the Graces and come of worthy stock, grudge not to good men converse with your beauty ; for in the cities of the Chalcidians Love the looser of our limbs blooms side by side with manliness.

The name of the lover was Anton, and of his love Philistus, if we may believe the poet Dionysius in his Origins.

SCOLIA

INTRODUCTION

Scholiast on Plato Gorgias: (2) Scolion is the name of the type of song sung over the wine. It was so called, according to Dicaearchus in his treatise on The Musical Competitions, because there were three kinds of song, of which the first was sung by all the guests together, the second by all in due order one by one, and the third by the best performers just as it happened, the last being called, because of the haphazard arrangement, solia. On the other hand Aristoxenus and Phyllis the writer on music declare that they used to set a number of dining-couches earlier, and not to 'Doctor' Ulpian; but the epitomator is probably at fault<sup>3</sup> after his defeat of the Spartans in the Second Messenian War πολλὰς κλίνας τιθέντες, παρὰ μέρος ἐξῆς μυρρίνας ἔχοντες ἢ δάφνας ἥδον γνώμας καὶ ἐρωτικά σύντονα. ἡ δὲ περίοδος σκολιὰ ἐγένετο διὰ τὴν σύνθεσιν τῶν κλινῶν ἐπὶ οἰκημάτων πολυγωνίων οὐσῶν, καὶ τούτῳ καὶ τὰς ἐπ' αὐτὰς κατακλίσεις παραβύστους γίνεσθαι. οὐ διὰ τὴν μελοποιίαν οὖν, διὰ δὲ τὴν τῆς μυρρίνης σκολιὰν διάδοσιν ταύτῃ καὶ τὰς ᾠδὰς σκολιὰς καλεῖσθαι. (γ') Ἀθήνησιν ἐν τῷ πρυτανείῳ παρὰ πότον σκόλια ἦδετο εἰς τινας, ὥσπερ εἰς Ἀρμόδιον, Ἀδμητον, Τελαμῶνα· εἰρήσθαι δὲ αὐτὸ σκολιὸν κατ' ἀντίφρασιν, ὅτι ῥάδια καὶ ὀλιγόστιχα ὡς ἐπιγράμματα ἦδετο ἂ ἐκαλεῖτο σκόλια, ἀντιπροτεινόντων ἀλλήλοις τῶν συμποτῶν, καὶ ἡλέγχοντο οἱ μὴ ᾄδοντες ὡς ἄμουσοι.

Sch. Ar. Nub. 1364 [ἔπειτα δ' ἐκέλευσ' αὐτὸν ἀλλὰ μυρρίνην λαβόντα | τῶν Αἰσχύλου λέξει τί μοι]. ## SCOLIA : INTRODUCTION round one table at weddings, and the guests one after the other sang proverbs and love-songs of a serious type, holding twigs of myrtle or laurel. The course followed among them was skolios or 'crooked' owing to the arrangement of the couches in polygonal rooms, which made the seating irregular. Thus the songs, according to these authorities, were not called crooked because of their metrical structure but because of the crooked course taken by the myrtle-twigg as it passed from hand to hand.<sup>1</sup>—(3) In the Prytaneum or Town-Hall of Athens scolia were sung over the wine on certain men such as Harmodius, Admetus, Telamon;<sup>2</sup> and this type of song was so called by antiphrasis (or saying the opposite to what you mean), because they were easy to sing and, like 'epigrams' (or metrical inscriptions), had but few lines, the guests offering the sprig to each other in turn, and those who did not sing were thus shown to be unmusical.<sup>3</sup>

Scholiast on Aristophanes Clouds ['And then I told him first to take the sprig and recite me something from Aeschylus']: To quote Dicaearchus' Musical Competitions, 'Moreover it appears to be natural for a man who gives a recitation or a song to do so with something in his hand. After-dinner singers by an old-established custom sing holding a branch of bay or myrtle.'

Plutarch Dinner-Table Problems: We are told that the Scolia were not a type of obscurely constructed songs, but were so called because the ancients first sang to the God a paean in which all the guests points to these scolia having formed a book; cf. on 14, 15, 21, and Sch. ## SCOLIA : INTRODUCTION took part, and secondly sang one after the other as a myrtle-sprig was passed round, this sprig being called αἶσακος because, I take it, the guest who took it sang (ᾄδειν); thirdly they passed round a lyre which every man who could play took, tuned, and sang to, but which was refused by the unmusical,<sup>1</sup> this last type of song being called scolion or crooked because it was not sung by all nor easy to sing. Other writers state that the myrtle-sprig did not go round in order, but from a guest reclining on one couch to a guest reclining on another; the first, having finished his song, passed it to the first guest on the second couch, and he to the first on the third, and then the second in like manner to the second; and the scolion received its name of 'crooked' very naturally from the shifting nature of the myrtle's course.<sup>2</sup>

Scholias on Aristophanes Wasps ['Mind you take up the scolia properly']: There was an ancient custom by which the guests at a feast sang one after the other, beginning where their predecessor ended. The first held a laurel or myrtle sprig and sang some lyrics of Simonides or Stesichorus up to a point of his own choosing, and then offered the twig to any guest he chose, no matter where he reclined. This guest would then continue where the other had left off, and pass it on in his turn to the man of his choice. The songs were called scolia or 'crooked' because of the difficulty involved in singing or reciting the lines without due warning.

The Same: According to some authorities it was the custom for any guest who could not sing to the lyre, to take a branch of bay or myrtle and sing (as

SCOLIA : INTRODUCTION

‘to sing the song of Cleitagora to the tune of the Admetus.’

Another Scholiast: ‘To Cleitagora’: Who was a poetess; by ‘the song of Cleitagora’ is meant the song to (or on) herself, Cleitagora.

Aristophanes Lysistrata:

Nowadays, when we arrive sober at Sparta, we immediately look to see what mischief we can do, and therefore what they do say we don’t hear and what they don’t say we suspect, and give them messages which contradict one another. To-day everything pleased them, so that if anybody were to have sung the Telamon instead of the Cleitagora,<sup>1</sup> we should have thanked him and forsworn ourselves.

Scholiast on the passage: The Telamon:—The beginning of a scolion ‘Son of Telamon, spearman Aias’ . . . The meaning is that we say and do mutually inconsistent things. For when anybody sings one of the scolia of Pindar we say that he ought to sing one of those of the poetess Cleitagora. Now Cleitagora was a Spartan poetess mentioned by Aristophanes in the Daughters of Danaüs.<sup>2</sup>

Suidas Lexicon: Scolion:—(2) Tyrannion wrote a Treatise on the Scolion-Metre at the instigation of the Emperor Gaius.

BOOK I

Athenaeus Doctors at Dinner: Many of the guests mentioned the well-known Attic Scolia or Drinking-Songs. These too call for notice here because of the ancient and simple style in which they are written, Alcaeus and Anacreon being famous for this particular type of poem, witness Aristophanes in the Banqueters: 'Take and sing a drinking-song of Alcaeus or Anacreon.' Another celebrated writer of scolia was Praxilla of Sicyon. These songs are so called not because the style of verse in which they are written is σκολιός or 'crooked,' for they are said to be reckoned among the laxer type of verse. But according to Artemon of Casandreia in the second volume of his Use of Books, which contains the poems sung at banquets, there were of these three kinds, of which the first was by custom sung by all the company together, and the second in a kind of succession round the table in which no gaps were allowed; the third, unlike the other two, was performed only by the guests who were considered real musicians, regardless of the order in which they sat, and so was called σκόλιον or 'crooked song' only as being irregular compared with the others, that is, as not being sung by all together nor yet in succession, but by some just as it might happen. Moreover the scolia were sung after the songs which were general and compulsory. When those were over each of the really musical guests was asked to entertain the company to a good song, 'good' meaning one which appeared to contain some exhortation or sentiment of practical utility.

Among the Deipnosophists or Dining Doctors, one now recited his choice among the scolia, and another his. All that were given will be found in the following pages.<sup>2</sup>

1

Trito-born Pallas, Queen Athena, uphold thou this City and her people, thou and thy Father, without pains or strifes or untimely deaths.

2

Thee O bountiful Demeter, mother of Wealth, I sing at the wearing of the wreath, and with thee Persephonè daughter of Zeus; all hail, ye twain, and protect this City.

3

In Delos of yore did Leto bear children twain, Phoebus the golden-haired, Lord Apollo, and Huntress Artemis shooter of deer, who holdeth so great sway over women.

4<sup>1</sup>

O Pan, thou Lord of famed Arcadia, comrade-dancer of the rioting Nymphs, mayst thou smile, ho Pan! with pleasure at these my merry songs.

5

We have won as we wished, and the Gods have given victory [for the sake of Cecropian] Pandrosus and her friend Athena [upholder of cities].<sup>2</sup>

7 SIMONIDES OR EPICHARMUS (?)

Health is the first good lent to men ;
A gentle disposition then ;
Next to be rich by no bye-ways ;
Lastly with friends t' enjoy our dayes.<sup>2</sup>

When the last song was sung and the delighted company had recalled the excellent Plato's praise of it,<sup>3</sup> Myrtilus pointed out that the comic poet Anaxandrides had held it up to ridicule in his play The Treasure-House in the following lines : ' Whoe'er it was who wrote the famous ditty | Was right to give first place in it to Health ; | But if the second best is to be pretty | And third be rich, then he was mad ; for Wealth | Comes next to Health, and there's no living thing | So wretched, friend, as Beauty hungering.'

The songs continued thus :

Which on my arm I buckle.
With these I plough, I reap, I sow,
With these I make the sweet vintage flow
And all around me truckle.

But your wights that take no pride to wield

AN ACCOUNT OF GREEK LYRIC POETRY

ON the third day of the Apaturia, known as Children's Day, when Athenian fathers brought the infants born within the year to be enrolled in the clan, it was the custom, according to Plato, for the schoolchildren to compete for prizes in the singing and recitation of passages from the poets. The young Cretans, according to Ephorus, were taught to sing the songs prescribed by law, including, no doubt, the War-Song of Hybrias. At Sparta the survival of the Spartan war-poems of Tyrtaeus may be due merely to their use as exhortations to battle, but the traditional kinship of the Cretan and Laconian codes suggests that they were also taught to the boys. The Arcadians, in Polybius' time, taught the children first to sing the Hymns and Paeans celebrating the Gods and heroes of their city, and as they grew older the Nomes of Philoxenus and Timotheus. At Chios an inscription of the 2nd Century B.C. mentions among school-subjects reading, recitation, and lyre-playing. We learn much the same of Teos from an inscription of the 3rd Century.<sup>1</sup> Take it as a whole, Greek education, so neglectful, as it seems to us, of languages, was far from neglectful of language, and taught it in an excellent way, by imitation, vivâ voce, of good models. The children of the Athenians, at any rate, grew up able to appreciate the masterpieces of literature, witness the mere size of the Dionysiac Theatre. And not only this. Even as children the young Greeks took part from time immemorial in festal song and dance, and every Athenian tribe as constituted by Cleisthenes produced large choruses of unprofessional singers, men and boys, at the annual festivals of Dionysus. When the young Athenian, and we may believe the same of other Greeks, took his place as a man in the symposia, he did not find the literary part of his education become a thing of the past, put away with his childish clothes and his long curls; but when the wine and dessert came on he would take his turn in singing or reciting poetry, and his choice was not always the latest thing from the θαύματα—such as Theophrastus' Late-Learner sits out several performances to get by heart—but often what he had learnt at school, a ῥῆσις from Euripides or a song to his own accompaniment from Alcaeus or Anacreon.

POETRY IN GREEK EDUCATION

This love of music and poetry doubtless goes back to the dim time when the two arts were one. Plato above, like the inscriptions, calls the children's performance ῥαψωδία, and says that they 'sang' Solon's elegies. These terms are survivals from that time. HOMER makes Achilles sing to the lyre the 'renowns of men,' which, with songs like the professional minstrel's Lay of the Wooden Horse and The Love of Ares and Aphrodite, seem to have been the material out of which the two great Epics were 'stitched.' But besides music, early poetry had another constituent, the dance. For just as voice and gesture are differentiations, we may believe, from a single activity, the communication of ideas, so song, poetry, and dancing, as we know them, are differentiations from the song-dance which primitive peoples still regard as a single whole. Although neither the civilisation described by Homer nor—so far as we can distinguish it from the other—that of the time in which he lived, can be called primitive in the anthropologist's sense, the Iliad contains survivals from this stage of development.

It is clear for instance that μολπή and μέλπεσθαι sometimes mean much more than song and singing. Hector says, boasting (7. 241): 'I know how to charge into the mellay of swift chariots, and how to do song-dance (μέλπεσθαι) to furious Ares in close battle.' In three places of the Iliad we find the phrase κυνῶν μέλπηθρα γενέσθαι 'become a song-dance of dogs,' that is their sport. In both these instances it is the dance rather than the song that makes the metaphor applicable. In the Odyssey (8. 266), Demodocus' song of the Love of Ares and Aphrodite is accompanied or at any rate preluded by a dance of young men.

And song was originally cult-song. Traces of this, too, survive in Homer. Phemius calls himself a minstrel who sings both to Gods and men, that is both Hymns and Lays, κλέα ἀνδρῶν. Homer often calls the minstrels θεῖοι, 'divine.' Their function appears to have been twofold. They were professional story-singers, and they led the dance. Just as the banquet was in origin part of the sacrifice, so what may be called the 'entertainment' side of the minstrel's activity was once part of the religious side. Similarly the cult song-dance at a wedding or a funeral cannot be dissociated historically from the dance or song-dance which in Homer appears generally to have become a mere entertainment. The dance depicted on the Shield of Achilles is thus described (Il. 18. 590) :

'Also did the glorious Lamo God devise therein a dancing-place (χορός) like that which Daedalus made for the fair-tressed Ariadne in wide Cnosus. There youths did dance and maidens of costly wooing, their hands upon one another's wrists. Of fine linen was the maidens' raiment, and the youths wore well-woven doublets glistening with the oil. Fair wreaths had the maids, and the young men daggers of gold that hung from silver belts. And now ran they around with deft feet exceeding lightly, as when a potter, sitting at the wheel which fits between his hands, makes trial to see if it run; now again ran they in lines to meet each other. Around the lovely dancing-place stood a great crowd rejoicing, and among them a divine minstrel made music on his lyre,<sup>1</sup> and leading the μολπή in the midst two tumblers whirled.'

These tumblers seem to be a sort of professional dancers who lead the rest. As in the Hyporcheme of later times, their dancing was probably more pronouncedly mimetic than that of the chorus proper. It is clear that here, as sometimes in Attic drama, the main body of the dancers is divided into two parts.

SONG-DANCE IN HOMER

The Wedding Song-dance in Homer is rather more clearly a religious act (Il. 18. 490) :

‘And therein wrought he two fair cities of mortal men. In the one were espousals and marriage-feasts, and beneath blaze of torches they led the brides from their chambers through the city, and loud rose the bridal song (ὕμναιος). The young men whirled in the dance, and high among them did sound the flute and the lyre; and all the women marvelled at it, standing each at her door.’ The Funeral Song (24. 718), like some of the songs of entertainment, seems already to have lost the dance. Perhaps it is merely taken for granted :

‘And when they had brought Hector’s body to the famous house, they laid him on a fretted bed, and set beside him the minstrels who lead the dirge, and these did wail a mournful song, and the women moaned in answer.’

Then in turn Andromache, Hecuba, and Helen make what is called a γῶος or address to the dead, and after each γῶος the women moan again. Here is something of the nature of an Amoebeic Dirge between the principals, with a chorus of wails from the rest. Perhaps the dance-element was supplied by the elaborate mourning gestures of the wailing women.<sup>1</sup> However that may be, the dance is clearly a part of the Dirge for Linus which is performed in the vintage-scene of the Shield (18. 572) :

‘And maidens and striplings with childish glee bare the honey-sweet fruit in platted baskets; and in the midst of them a boy made delightful music with a clear-toned lyre and sang to it the fair Linus-Song (or sang of the fair Linus)<sup>2</sup> in a piping voice, while the rest, beating in time, followed his dancing (μολπῇ) and his singing, leaping lightly with their feet.’

Such a cult-dirge would retain ancient features longer

THE NATURE OF GREEK METRE

than the dirge for an actual burial. If it be true that children's games are often rituals that have degenerated, it is significant that we find mention of μολπή, song-dance, when Nausicaa plays ball with her maidens (Od. 6. 100). When Alcinous gives a display by the two champion ball-throwers, it is a dance:

'and the other youths stood by the lists and beat time (or shouted in time), and a great din uprose.'<sup>1</sup>

In connexion with this early song and dance we have had more than one mention of beating time to, or keeping in time with, the performer. This brings us to the question of THE NATURE OF GREEK METRE.

It is usual nowadays to maintain that it went entirely by length of syllable; there was no 'ictus.' This, it is true, tallies with what we know of the natural accentuation—pitch, not stress—of the language in classical times; and if the history of early Greek music could be confined to the flute, the theory would, on the face of it, be reasonable enough. But all the early bards are lyre-players, and for a good reason; the lyre-player, unlike the flute-player, can sing to his own accompaniment. Moreover 'percussive' sound like that of the lyre was probably found a better accompaniment to the dance than the 'sustained' sound of the flute.<sup>2</sup> There is no instance in Homer of dance or song accompanied merely by a flute. Now it is well known that languages change the nature of their accentuation, at one period stress (or varied loudness) predominates, at another pitch (or varied note); and Latin, a stress-language, successfully adopted Greek metre. It seems therefore more likely that the Greek metre of classical times did involve a very appreciable ictus; and this (though of course it came to run counter to the natural pitch-accent of the word, and, as in Polish folk-music and in English blank verse, could be shifted on occasion from its 'proper' place)<sup>3</sup> may well have been a survival from the time when Greek or pre-Greek had more of the nature of a stress-language—whether or no this time was identical with the very early period which produced the ‘weak’ forms of ‘roots’ exemplified by δί-φρ-ος beside φέρ-ω.

That the Hexameter, or the elements out of which it grew, was originally a stress-metre, is perhaps suggested by its never admitting resolution of one long syllable into two short, and by such Homeric scansion as ἀνδροτῆτα and φίλη. It is significant that Aeolic verse, which, as we shall see, shows elements of greater antiquity than the Hexameter, is equally unfavourable to resolution; admits ictus-lengthening—if such it be—of certain consonants; and, as might be expected in the early stages of a language which preferred σοφώτερος to σοφότερος, eschews the succession of three short syllables. The strange contentment of classical Attic with such a form as στενότερος (due to the word’s having been originally σενFός) shows a change in the feeling of its speakers<sup>1</sup> which, whether actually contemporaneous with it or not, can hardly be dissociated from the spread of resolved feet from Iambic-Trochaic into Melic metres.<sup>2</sup>

If Greek metre was originally a stress-metre, it does not perhaps necessarily follow that it involved ‘equidistant stress,’ that is, that it was divisible into equal ‘bars’; but, other considerations apart, Homer’s mentions of beating time assuredly point this way for the folk-music, and the use of the κρούπεζα<sup>3</sup> for the later art-music. Eventually no doubt, just as it became admissible to shift the ictus, the equidistance could be broken on occasion and even frequently, as it is in the Elizabethan madrigals,<sup>4</sup> but, as in our blank verse, the underlying sense of it must always, one would think, have been there. Despite the half-parallel of our own plain-song, it is hard to believe that the Greek poet-musicians of the 6th and 5th Centuries, whom Aristoxenus speaks of as φιλόρρυθμοι in contrast with the φιλομελεῖς of his own day, should have habitually taught a chorus of fifty non-

<sup>1</sup> the later working of the change appears in the fact established by de Groot that Demosthenes avoids groups (a) of more than two ‘shorts’ and also (b) of more than two ‘longs,’ whereas Plutarch and Philo avoid (b) but not (a)

DANCE AND METRE

professional Athenians to sing and dance an unpunctuated, or unevenly punctuated, succession of 'longs' and 'shorts,' in which the grouping could make little or no appeal to the lay ear. Another perhaps illuminating consideration is, that the arrangement of Anapaests and Iambi (or Trochees) in two-foot 'metra' would seem to indicate 4-time rather than 2-time in the one case, and 6-time rather than 3-time in the other, and this grouping surely implies a secondary ictus, as in our 6/8-time, half-way through the 'metron' or bar. If there was or had been no ictus at all, why the contrast in nomenclature with the Hexameter, where foot and metron are identical? For us this question of the nature of Greek metre has some real importance. For with a very few exceptions, and those either late or fragmentary, we have lost all the music of Greek lyric; and if we are to accept the view that there was no ictus, let alone no equidistant ictus, we, whose own poetry goes by stress, a stress that in feeling if not in fact is equidistant, must in the nature of things lose much of the rhythm as well. And yet the φιλόρρυθμος reader of, say, an ode of Pindar, gets an aesthetic pleasure from the rhythm; and making all allowance for undoubted difference of metrical association between the Greeks and ourselves,<sup>1</sup> this effect often seems to suit the sense so admirably that it is hard to believe it a mere phantom.<sup>2</sup>

THE NATURE OF GREEK DANCING is mostly beyond our present scope; but certain considerations may throw some light on the early history of Greek metre. The use of the word 'foot' in a metrical sense proves that, of the bodily gestures of which ancient dancing consisted, the most important was the movement of the feet, doubtless because the feet strike the ground and so produce sound. Its invariable use for a group of two or more syllables and not for one syllable suggests that the step and the syllable ceased to correspond at a very early stage. This stage seems to have been reached earlier in the Dactylic and Anapaestic than in the other metres, and earlier in

THE CYCLES: HESIOD

the Iambic and Trochaic than in the Melic. The use of Anapaestic rhythms for marching suggests that there were two and not three steps to the Anapaest; and the Prosodiac for instance (≡—vv—vv—), clearly involved an unsung step or musical rest of a whole foot between each pair of lines. Yet that the foot once corresponded with the syllable and not with two or more syllables, is made probable both by the word itself and by the ultimate identity of poetry and dance, considered with the particularly slow development of 'resolution' in Melic verse, which, otherwise so much more open to innovation than the other forms, preserved its connexion with the dance far longer and shows other signs of a greater antiquity.

When Greece emerges from the Dark Age which followed the Age of the Heroes described by Homer, this dimly-seen and hardly-to-be-measured time of changes territorial, economic, political, we find the Hexameter still the art-metre par excellence, but it has widened its scope. The Trojan CYCLE,<sup>1</sup> some of them of the school of Homer in Chios, but drawing sometimes on material other than his, have begun their work of filling the gaps in the Tale of Troy; and we have traces also of a Theban Cycle concerned with the two expeditions against Thebes, and of other Epic poetry such as the Titanomachy. These poets mostly are the conservatives—the old conventional metre and the old aristocratic themes. The kings were mostly perhaps still kings, and doubtless liked to have bards singing at their table of the deeds of their heroic ancestors. We hear of a king Agamemnon of Aeolian Cymè, whose daughter was married to Midas king of Phrygia.<sup>2</sup> The name and the marriage are both significant. Now this Cymè not only plays a part in the traditions surrounding the name of Homer, but was the city whence HESIOD's father emigrated to Boeotia; and in Hesiod, kings, by which are probably meant nobles, are oppressors of the people. Homer glorifies war and kingship like the court-poets before him. By Hesiod's time the force of the royal tradition has weakened. The poet now detests war, and his audience—and with it his subject-matter—has widened. Hesiod is a popular poet who uses the old metre for new subjects. He writes more for the gatherings at the forge and less for the feasts in the baronial hall. Epic poetry, long become a mere entertainment, takes new life as a means of instruction. The poet resumes his ancient rôle of prophet. For our present purpose the greatest thing about Hesiod is that he speaks not only of the real present instead of an ideal past, but of himself. This, as far as we can tell, was new. But we must remember his Aeolic ancestry. The personal note which rings so clear in the poems of Sappho and Alcaeus may well have been struck in Aeolis, as we shall see, before their day.

The same period produced the earliest of the HOMERIC HYMNS. The Heroic Lay which was the material of Homer's Epics seems once to have been the secular, the purely narrative, portion of a sacrificial song of which the Hymn, part invocation, part theogony, part prayer, was the sacred or ritual portion.

The extant Hymns have a way of referring to a 'praise of men' to follow, and Thucydides calls the Hymn to Apollo a proem or prelude.<sup>1</sup> Now early ritual song, for instance Ölen's Delian Hymn and the hymn performed by the Gods at the beginning of the Hymn to the Pythian Apollo, was danced, as primitive poetry generally if not always is; yet the Hymn proper of the Greek classical times was not.<sup>2</sup> It is possible that it was the use of the narrative part as a mere story-telling which reacted at an early period on the ritual part, and caused it ultimately to drop the dance. The process of division was doubtless slow, occasional long before it was usual; and even after it had come about, the dance seems sometimes to have been thought proper for the Hymn. Of the three songs of Demodocus (Od. 8. 73, 266, 499), though all are apparently mere entertainment, the second, which alone is concerned with the doings of the Gods, alone is accompanied by a dance. This theory is supported by the use of ὕμνος by Homer in Odyssey 8. 429 for what is apparently a purely secular song—a survival perhaps from the days when all formal song was ritual, and the partition of the Hymn had not yet taken place.

It is remarkable too that in the earliest or Mythological Period, the DARK AGE, to which we must now turn back, the period of Orpheus, Thamyris, and Amphion, we hear little if anything of any poetical form but the Hymn. Yet to judge from references in Homer, analogies from other peoples, and the usages of the Greeks in later times, there no doubt existed side by side with them Wedding-Songs and Laments, for instance, and Occupation-Songs of spinners, weavers, grinders, rowers, and the like. How far all these should be classed as cult-songs it is difficult to say, and if not, where to draw the line. Go back far enough, and in a sense every human act is cult. The point here is that the Hymn seems at this very early time to have taken the first, perhaps the only, place in what we should now call professional circles. Why, is fairly clear. It was the subject of religious competition. And naturally, for these contests, so marked a feature of Greek life at all periods, were performed in honour of a God or hero, and for such a contest in music the hymn of praise or incantation—once of the ghost—is the obvious subject: The fact that Olen's Delian Hymn to Eileithyia (p. 594, below) was choral and the Homeric Hymns monodic, need not trouble us.

If we may trust Pausanias' account of the earliest competitions at Delphi—and his account almost certainly represents the local tradition if not the local records—the early Hymns were sometimes, at any rate, sung and played by a single person. The truth is, the clear-cut line between choral and monodic song (or song-dance) was drawn comparatively late. Homer's minstrels already do their dancing by proxy; Hesiod's Apollo, like Archilochus, still leads the dance as he sings and plays. That the early Hymn proper, that is the more strictly ritual part of the Heroic Lay, was, like the Hymn to the Muses which begins the Works and Days and some of the extant Homeric Hymns, quite short, is perhaps indicated by Pausanias' remark on the shortness of the only genuine Hymns of Orpheus. Before the partition (which would be aided by the fact that certain narratives would be more acceptable than others to any particular audience of the wandering bard, while the same 'hymn' would be just as welcome to the descendants of one hero as to those of another) the ritual part would tend to shrink, like the choral element in the Attic Drama. Once the partition was complete, the Hymn itself would tend to become partly secularised and lengthen out into narrative, such as we find in the longer Homeric Hymns and Alcaeus' Hymn to Apollo.

Among the early bards we hear of Anthes of Anthedon in Boeotia, who composed hymns, Pierus of Pieria who composed 'the poems about the Muses,' the Delphian Philammon who described in lyric poems (or in music) the births of Leto and Artemis and Apollo, and first established choruses at the Delphian temple. These may not all be facts, but it is at least clear that Central Greece kept its light burning throughout the Dark Age. The immemorial use of the Hexameter, though not invariable, in the Delphic oracles, betokens the high antiquity of the staff of poets which Strabo tells us was attached to the temple for this purpose. With such literature the didactic element in Hesiod doubtless has some kinship.<sup>1</sup> Even in Hesiod's day there seems to have been something of the nature of poetry-schools or guilds of poets in Boeotia. The cult of the Muses there, the existence of the Homeridae in Chios, the parallel of the Asclepiadae in Cos, and the way in which the Greeks took it for granted, as for instance in Plato's Protagoras, that arts and crafts passed from father to son, seem to point here to something more than a mere casual association of master and pupil. It may well be that Hesiod, that is the author of the Works and Days, attended a long-established school of ῥαψωδία, to which his pupils or pupils' pupils, the authors of the other Hesiodic poems, also belonged. The strong Aeolic element in the Boeotian dialect and the discovery of 7th-Century Ionic inscriptions in Thebes, no less than the later history of Boeotian poetry, speaks for the political and cultural survival in Boeotia of a mixed pre-Dorian element, doubtless at first oppressed but not, as in most of the Peloponnese and in Thessaly, permanently enslaved, by the Dorian invaders.

Cultural survivals of the days before the Great Migrations are to be found elsewhere in Greece, notably in Sicyon, which preserved to the time of Heracleides of Pontus (340 B.C.) its register of the priestesses of Argos and the poets and musicians,<sup>1</sup> and where the existence of a fourth tribe representing the pre-Dorian element has doubtless a causal connexion with its claim to the first Greek painters and sculptors and the first appearance there of Tragic Choruses. At Athens, where there had been no break with the past, the Lycomids, hereditary priests of Demeter, preserved the only works of Orpheus, Pamphos, and Musaeus which Pausanias accepts as genuine. These were Hymns sung at the Eleusinian Festival, some of them Hymns to Love. A fragment of Pamphos is worth quoting as one of the very few surviving pieces of pre-Homeric literature: 'Pamphos,' says Pausanias (7. 21), 'who composed for the Athenians their most ancient hymns, says that Poseidon is "Giver of horses and of ships with spread sails"'

At Delos we hear from Herodotus and others of Olen 'the Lycian.' Pausanias speaks, as though they were extant, of his Hymn to Achæia, a Hyperborean maiden who came to Delos, his Hymn to Hera, and his Hymn to Eileithyia. From the last he quotes (8. 21) what is perhaps our earliest piece of Greek literature; for he places Olen before Pamphos and Orpheus: 'The Lycian Olen composed various Hymns for the Delians including one to Eileithyia, in which he calls her or 'deft spinner.' The Hymn doubtless celebrated the births of Apollo and Artemis. Olen's hymns are probably referred to in the Homeric Hymn to the Delian Apollo (156): 'And there is this great wonder also, whose renown shall never die, the Delian maids that are servants of the Far-Shooter; for when they have praised Apollo and after him Leto and Artemis that delighteth in arrows, they sing a strain telling of men and women of ancient days and charm the tribes of men.' These Hymns, known to Herodotus, were still performed in the days of Callimachus (see p. 488, above). Of the several recorded inventors of the Hexameter, the claim of Olen is perhaps the best established.

All these survivals of the Dark Age seem to be connected with Apollo or Demeter. Speaking of the earliest competition at Delphi, Pausanias says (7. 2) that he was told that the subject of the contest was a Hymn to the God, and that the winner was Chrysothemis of Crete, son of Carmanor priest of Apollo. The Cretan connexion, confirmed by archaeological finds, occurs too in the Hymn to the Pythian Apollo, which makes the God appoint as his ministers at Delphi the crew of a Cretan ship of Cnossus, miraculously guided to the port of Crisa.

'The next winner' continues Pausanias 'was Philammon, and next to him Philammon's son Thamyris. Orpheus, however, gave himself such airs because of the Mysteries that he would not enter for the prize, and Musaeus, who laid himself out to copy Orpheus, followed his example.' This seems to mean that Orpheus and Musaeus, as belonging to the Eleusinian Mysteries of Demeter, could not reasonably be supposed to have competed in a Hymn to Apollo. The tradition points to an ancient jealousy between Eleusis and Delphi. 'They say' he goes on 'that Eleuther won a Pythian victory by his strong sweet voice alone, for the song he sang was not his own.' We may note this early, and to Pausanias noteworthy, case of a lyrist-musician who was not also a poet. 'It is said too that Hesiod was excluded from the competition because he had not learnt to accompany himself on the lyre. Homer came to Delphi to inquire of the oracle; but even if he had known how to play the lyre, the loss of his sight would have made the accomplishment useless.'

EUMOLPUS: MUSAEUS: AMPHION

Apparently the informants of Pausanias believed that Homer and Hesiod were not musicians as well as poets, that is that they were rhapsodes or reciters of Epic verse. Did the rise of true Epic as opposed to the Heroic Lay begin the divorce of Greek poetry from music?

Philammon, like Orpheus, was said to have come from Thrace. As we have seen, he first established choruses to the God; according to some accounts he invented the Lyric Nome. Thamyras is mentioned as contemporary with Eurytus, that is with Heracles, in the Catalogue, II. 2. 591. Strabo, strangely enough, makes him ruler of part of the Chalcidic peninsula. Heracleides ascribes to him a Battle of the Titans. To the same Thracian family belonged, according to some authorities, Eumolpus and Musaeus. The reputed descendants of Eumolpus were priests of the Eleusinian Mysteries. The story which made him a grandson of Boreas through the Attic maiden Oreithyia probably reflects a desire to associate him with Athens rather than Eleusis. Musaeus was said to have invented the Dactyl.<sup>1</sup> Besides a collection of oracles (see vol. ii, p. 223), he was credited with the authorship of works which remind us of Hesiod, Precepts, 'ὑποθήκαι, addressed to his son, and a Theogony. But Pausanias believed (1. 22) that his only genuine extant work was 'the Hymn he composed to Demeter for the Lycomids.' Athenian tradition gave him burial on the Museum Hill. Three words of 'his, quoted by Aristotle, stand as the motto for this Epilogue. The only one of what appears to be the earlier stratum of these primitive poets or poet-priests that does not seem to have been connected in any account with Thrace, is Amphion, who is mentioned in the Odyssey as the founder of Thebes, where his tomb and his tripod were shown to Pausanias.

<sup>1</sup> Were the earliest 'pre-hexameter' songs spondaic? Compare the fragment of Pamphos quoted above and the spondaic fragments attributed to Terpander. Do Spondaic-Dactylic and Trochaic-Iambic origins unite in a group of two stresses, one strong and the other weak, the result of that mental grouping of successive equal and equidistant sounds which we call rhythm, a grouping which in biped man naturally, where walking or running is concerned, falls into twos?

SOURCES OF GREEK MUSIC

Although Herodotus makes these early poets posterior not only to Homer but to Hesiod, other traditions placed them before the Dorian Migrations. If they are historical, and most of them probably are, they should perhaps be placed in the time of the Achæan princedoms along with Demodocus and Phemius with whom they are sometimes coupled.

Their foreign origin, if we may use the term of days when the line between Greek and Barbarian was but faintly drawn, implies that the Greeks, or at any rate the people from whom they derived a large part of their culture, were already in Greece, and should be considered in connexion with such myths as those of the Telchines and the Idaean Dactyls. Indeed Alexander Polyhistor, quoted by Plutarch Mus. 5, ascribed the introduction of instrumental music (κρούματα) to Olympus and the Idaean Dactyls. This seems to be a combination of two accounts. The Dactyls were the Phrygian priests of Cybele and, according to tradition, great workers in iron. The spread of a higher type of music, and probably this means of poetry, seems to have coincided roughly with the passing—doubtless very gradual—of the Bronze Age. The other account used by Alexander apparently ascribed the introduction of κρούματα to Olympus, adding that the first fluteplayer was Hyagnis who was followed by his son Marsyas who was succeeded by Olympus. This is the Marsyas who was said to have been flayed alive as the result of a contest in music with Apollo. The barbarity of the story is a mark of its great age; Marsyas' name is not Greek; and the scene of his death is laid, like that of the activities of the Dactyls, in Phrygia. The myth clearly reflects an early antagonism between 'professional' wind and string, like that which made Athena reject the flute when she saw the reflexion of herself blowing it. It is indeed possible that the flute as a 'professional' instrument came in from Asia and found the lyre, which had come from Thrace, already installed in popular, or shall we say princely, favour. But the great vogue of the flute in the conservative Dorian communities of classical times shows that, if so, it must have come in very early. The tradition followed by Telestes was that it came with Pelops. In any case we must not imagine, either of wind or string, that no sort of instrument of the kind was indigenous in Greece. It has been thought that what Olympus really introduced was the double-flute. The Egyptians first used the double-flute after their conquest of Asia Minor. It was used in Crete in Late Minoan times.

END OF THE DARK AGE

It should be added that the apparent contradictions in the accounts of cultural importations—Olen of Lycia and Olen of Thrace, the Hyperborean and Lycian origins of the worship of Apollo, and the like—are probably due partly to migrations such as that of the Phrygians across the Hellespont, partly to rivalries like that between Delphi and Delos, partly to the desire of the early Greek colonists of Asia to connect themselves with the Greece of the Heroic Age. Moreover the traditions of these early poets are doubtless contaminated by the ulterior motives of the Orphics and the Pythagoreans. On the whole we must conclude at present in favour generally of Eastern and South-Eastern origins rather than Northern. But the worship of the Muses clearly came from the North, and there seems to be reason sufficient to make a further exception of Orpheus.

Between these bards and the age of Homer and Hesiod, with which we have already dealt, there is an almost complete blank. Yet we may well believe there was no break in tradition. Homer, however we interpret the name, clearly had forerunners. The passages where the Iliad speaks of two names for the same person or thing (e.g. Il. i. 403), one the divine and the other the human, point certainly to an older, probably to a more hieratic and possibly a non-Hellenic, stage of the Epic; and the use of 'stock' epithets not justified by the context is a certain sign of a long tradition. Hesiod, as we have seen, may have attended a long-established Boeotian school of poetry; the musico-poetical contests at Delphi were of great antiquity; and Orpheus' severed head, in the myth, was carried by the Hebrus to the shore of Lesbos.

EUMELUS: THE ELEAN HYMN

parative) certainties. While the true Epic of the Cycles, as opposed to the quasi-Epic of the Hesiodic school, continues to flourish in Ionia, there arises in Dorian Corinth an interesting figure, who on the strength of his Processional to Delos, written before the Spartan conquest of Messenia, appears in the text-books as the first Lyric poet. But it should be remembered that EUMELUS was also reputed an Epic poet of the Trojan Cycle and a writer of history in Epic verse. The last sounds like a new departure—if it is true; and it seems reasonable enough. Formally it would be a natural development of the theogonic element of the Epos; in the great colonising times of the 8th Century the colonists would welcome a rhapsode who told them tales of their great ancestors of the motherland; and Eumelus was not only a contemporary but a kinsman of the man who founded Syracuse from Corinth. His Processional Hymn, which is written in what was then the only ‘art’-metre, although it is doubtful whether Pausanias means that it was the first sent by the Messenians or the first ever sent, was probably by no means unique as a festal song. There may well have been a demand, for instance, for wedding-songs long before Alcman’s day, and one at least of Sappho’s was written in the traditional Hexameter. It smacks of the great days of expansion that these lines of Eumelus, quoted—significantly—as evidence for a musical competition, testify to innovations in poetry. The poet is clearly refusing to be bound by convention.<sup>1</sup>

Side by side with the professional poetry of the Epic tradition there existed now, no doubt, as always, a body of folk-poetry which was soon to react, as we shall see, upon the poetry of the great musical contests. The Elean women’s Hymn or Incantation to Dionysus, though we have it in a modernised version, is certainly very old, probably a good deal older than Eumelus; for in it Dionysus is a bull-God or rather a bull-hero,<sup>1</sup> and there is no mention of wine. Metrically it seems to go back, like some of the Half-hexameter proverbs, to pre-hexameter days, from the same stock indeed as the Epic, but a remote cousin.

<sup>1</sup> Croiset suggests that the ref. to the ‘free sandal’ means that the chorus was composed not of slaves but of citizens, ii, p. 52

But the joint reign of the Epic and the lyre—a reign long afterwards still remembered in the subconscious mind of the Greek race, for κρούματα, literally 'striking,' and πολύχορδος, literally 'of many strings,' were used in classical times of flute as well as of lyre—was coming to an end. As we enter the 7th Century, we find new kinds of professional poetry, new kinds which, though they may not in their extant state have so long a past behind them as the Hexameter, must nevertheless not be regarded as new creations. The lore of the unskilled, unlearned, unrecognised, has merely begun one of its reactions on the lore of the skilled, the learned, the fashionable.<sup>2</sup> Let us begin with the ELEGY. The ancient view was that it originated in a lament. This is very likely true. The non-Hellenic word ἔλεγος which first appears in Echembrotus (c. 600 B.C.) has been compared with the Armenian elēgn 'reed' or 'flute'; Armenian is the modern representative of ancient Phrygian; the instrument of Elegy was the flute; the flute was believed by the Greeks to have come from Phrygia; the flute seems to have been connected with the worship of Cybele as the lyre with that of Apollo.

At first sight the fact that the Pentameter, which is certainly misnamed, enters history in association with the Hexameter, is a strong indication that it developed out of it. Yet not only does it appear as early as Stesichorus (c. 600 B.C.) in conjunction with a Dactylic Heptameter, but in Archilochus (c. 650) we find 'half-pentameters' mixed with Iambic and Trochaic metres; and in inscriptions a Pentameter sometimes ends a succession of Hexameters. Moreover if its early association with the

THE ELEGIAC DISTICH

Hexameter is to be used to prove its derivation from it, the same argument will hold for the Iambic, which first appears among the hexameters of the Margites. It is more likely that the Pentameter was derived partly from the pre-Epic Hexameter of the early Hymns and partly from the reaction of the 'pre-hexameter' folk-songs<sup>1</sup> upon it. Archilochus, who, as we shall see, seems to have 'gone to the folk' for some, at least, of his metres, combines Iambic and Trochaic with 'Half-pentameters'; and it is on the face of it more likely that the Pentameter is a conjunction of two wholes than that Archilochus split it and used half at a time.

Now if the ἔλεγος was originally a lament, as it still is in Euripides' Helen, Iphigenia in Tauris, and Andromache, and in Aristophanes' Birds, it is possible that the two parts of the Pentameter were once sung by two semi-choruses and the preceding Hexameter by a singer to the flute. The refrain of the ancient Elean Hymn to Dionysus is doubled, and so is the cry ὦ ἦτε Βάκχαι in Euripides; the Muses in the Iliad lament Achilles ἀμειβόμεναι, 'alternately'; and an amoebeic Dirge is implied in the Lament for Bion (48). Such an origin might account for what is so strange in the Elegiac Distich in comparison with the frequently overlapping Epic Hexameter, its unity. Of course, in the earliest Elegiacs, those of Callinus and Archilochus, this non-overlapping rule is by no means always observed; moreover the second part of the Pentameter is always Dactylic, while Spondees are allowed in the first. But it is only our school-training in the Ovidian Distich which emphasises the frequency of these early overlaps rather than their infrequency; and the Dactylic fixity of the second half may well be a custom which came in after the combination of the two parts had taken place; for as we shall see, it was an early tendency of Greek verse, as of Sanskrit, to keep rules more carefully towards the end than towards the beginning of the line, witness, among other things, the comparative rareness even in Homer of a Spondaic fifth foot. Moreover the double-long at the middle and end points fairly clearly to original breaks in the sense, breaks which it would naturally take far longer for change of fashion to override than the break at the end of the

FLUTE-SONG

Epic Hexameter, which at the most was equivalent to only a short syllable.

Just as the lyre-metre, the Hexameter, once the metre of the Hymn, probably came, as we have seen, to be used for the Epic Lay, and the Epic Lay developed into Hexameter poems of various sorts, so the flute-metre, the Elegiac, came to be used by the 8th-Century Ionians for Elegiac poems of various sorts. While Clonas, the so-called inventor of the Flute-sung Nome, probably used it at Sparta in the Nome called Elegos when the Nome was still hieratic, his later contemporary Callinus of Ephesus uses it for the purely secular purpose of a War-Song, and Archilochus of Paros not much, if any, later employs it for consolation, lament, accounts of war and travel, and what not. This change of purpose, which of course came gradually—for Callinus also wrote an Elegy to Zeus—was, as we shall see, of the utmost importance.

Continuing his account of the early Pythian contests (7.2), Pausanias tells us that the first competitions at Delphi were musico-poetical; not till the First Pythiad (586 B.C.) was the athletic element brought in, and at the same date the musico-poetical 'events' were extended to include, besides the immemorial Singing to the Lyre, Flute-song and Flute-playing; at the Second Pythiad (582 B.C.) 'the Amphictyons discontinued the Flute-song because they decided that it was not an auspicious form of music'—that is, unsuitable for a ritual which was intended to invoke the favour of the Gods —; 'for it consisted of very doleful flute-music with Elegies'—ἐλεγεία glossed θρήνοι—'sung to its accompaniment.' This left the Lyre-song for the poet-musician and the Flute-playing for the musician. At the Eighth Pythiad (558 B.C.) the Lyre-playing interest, as we should call it, succeeded in inducing the Amphictyons to include a contest in Lyre-playing. Now in Alcaeus' Hymn to Apollo the Delphians were represented as singing and dancing a Paean to flutes; moreover Aleman said in a lost passage that Apollo played the flute himself. The coincidence of dates indicates that in the first quarter of the 6th Century the flute-players were working up their case on the mythological side. It is to be noted that we are told that the fluteplayers mentioned by Alcman had Phrygian names.

All the same, it must not be supposed that the flute had nothing to do with Apollo till 586. We are told that the first fluteplayer to use the Lydian mode was Olympus in his lament for the serpent Python; and as such a lament can only be conceived as part of the Delphian ritual, this would take the use of the flute at Delphi back to the early 7th Century at least. The truth would seem to be that the flute had long taken part in the ritual of Apollo, but for some reason, probably the great vogue of the lyrist-minstrels as we see it in Homer, it was not given the same prominence as the lyre.

The attempt of the fluteplayers to win recognition in the Pythian contests was, as we have seen, only partly successful. The contest in the Flute-sung Nome—which seems to have been in the Elegiac metre and at first choral—was not repeated. Elsewhere, however, we hear of Flute-song, notably in the ‘solos’ of Attic Drama, down to the last Century B.C. Meanwhile flute-playing continued to flourish all over Greece. At Sparta it was the custom to march into battle to the sound of flutes; flutes accompanied not only wrestling and other exercise of the palaestra at Athens, but many occupations such as building, reaping, baking, everywhere: and in the Doric Choral Melic, as we shall see, the flute came to play a great part.

Another seemingly new type of poetry to appear in the 7th Century was the IAMBIC. Whatever the derivation of the word ἱαμβος, it cannot be dissociated from that of διθύραμβος, which will be discussed later. It occurs first in Archilochus: ‘I care neither for iambi nor for delights,’ where the context shows that the citation was believed to be a reply to those who were trying to force him to pore over his books. The exact meaning he attached to it is not clear. We only know that he used this word of his poetry, or of a certain kind of it. Whether it had the meaning or not to Archilochus, however, it is certain that when the word came to be used to describe a form of literature, it came to connote ridicule and invective, and the idea of ridicule seems to have joined in it with that of improvisation.<sup>1</sup> The reciter of ἱαμβοί was also called ἱαμβος. In metric the word came to be used solely as we use it, save that Trochaic and Iambic were sometimes classed together as Iambic.

The earliest literary use of this metre, as we have seen, is in the burlesque Homeric poem called the Margites, where it is mixed with the Epic Hexameter. All we know of the date of this poem is that it is earlier than Archilochus. Like the Pentameter, the Iambic seems to have come from the songs of the people. It was used in the ritual of libation (see p. 512) and in the Eleusinian Mysteries. In the Homeric Hymn to Demeter (7th Century) a woman named Iambè moves the sorrowing Goddess to 'laugh and be cheerful with many a quip and jest,' and we have her definitely identified with ritual Iambic lines :

ἦ δὴ οἱ καὶ ἔπειτα μεθύστερον εὐαδεν ὀργαῖς,

'who afterwards also did cheer her moods'—a reference to the Jestings at the Bridge (γεφυρισμός) in the procession from Athens to Eleusis. Of this jesting we probably have a fragment in the two lines quoted on page 514, where we have Iambic metre certainly in the first and probably also in the second. At Sparta we find this metre in the Chorus of the Three Ages (p. 530); at Athens in the formula for dismissing the ghosts at the Anthesteria.<sup>2</sup> And it occurs in the songs for Children's Games (p. 538). Such customs are very old, yet here is the Iambic senarian full fledged.

The Iambic metre, then, though it appears to have been raised to art-status by the Ionians, was known and used in ritual all over Greece.

ARCHILOCHUS

paniment of a sort of lyre, the ιαμβύκη. The κλεψίαμβος<sup>1</sup> accompanied it also, but with this the vocal delivery was something halfway between singing and speaking, apparently resembling the spoken part of a modern comic song, where the performer merely speaks in time with the music.

For the origin of the art-use of the Iambic it is important to note that ARCHILOCHUS belonged to a family of hereditary priests of Demeter.

It is well known how in his anger at being refused the hand of the daughter of a Parian noble he attacked the whole family in an Iambic poem which he sang or recited at the festival of Demeter, producing such an effect that the daughters of Lycambes, whose character the verses called in question, were believed to have hanged themselves for shame.

Clearly, like the Hymns in the contests at Delphi in honour of Apollo, Iambic song-poems were the subjects of poëtico-musical competitions at Paros in honour of Demeter. The sequel may indeed have done something to bring the Iambic Trimeter into more than local or ritual use among the professional poets of Greece; but the ancient belief that Archilochus invented it, in view of the complete metrical identity of his lines with those of the Attic tragedy of 150 years later, is extremely unlikely. He was also said to have invented the combination of unlike rhythms. This in view of the Margites can be only partly true.

‘To him also’ says Plutarch<sup>2</sup> ‘are ascribed the Epode, the Tetrameter, the Cretic, the Prosodiac, and the lengthening of the Dactylic Hexameter (e.g. in heptameters and octameters); by some also the Elegiac’—and so on, referring to his new metrical combinations, and then—‘the practice of reciting some of the Iambics to the instrument (λέγεσθαι παρὰ τὴν κρούσιν) and singing others’—and a little further on—‘he is also thought to have invented τὴν κρούσιν τὴν ὑπὸ τὴν φῶγην, or playing a higher melody than what you sing,<sup>1</sup> whereas all the poets before him played the same notes as they sang.'

It is clear, judging him merely from the technical standpoint, that we have to do here with a great poet-musician. But Archilochus was great for other reasons. Not only is he the first satirist, but with the partial exception of Hesiod he is the earliest person of our western civilisation that we know from a portrait drawn by himself.

His works as preserved in antiquity comprised Elegies, Iambics (including Trochaics), Epodes, Inscriptions (that is epitaphs and votive labels), and a Book of Hymns addressed mostly to Dionysus and called 'Ἰόβακχοι. In the Elegies he says: 'I am the servant of lord Enyalios, yet I am also versed in the lovely gift of the Muses.' And this: 'In the spear is my kneaded bread, in the spear my Ismarian wine, I recline when I drink on the spear.' And again: 'Ah me! lifeless I lie in the toils of Desire, pierced through and through with the intolerable pains the Gods have given me.'

These little fragments suffice to show that a new thing has arisen in Greek poetry, the personal poem. The fame of Archilochus, as the mere preservation of his poems testifies, was Panhellenic. His Iambic Hymn of Victory to Heracles, originally sung 'for his own victory at Paros in the Hymn to Demeter' became something like<sup>2</sup> the Greek equivalent of our 'See the conquering hero comes,' itself originally written for a particular, though imaginary, occasion.

To sum up, we may ask what do we feel as chiefly distinguishing Archilochus from the Epic poets? Not so much his metres, different through these are, as his notion of what is a proper subject for poetry. In the century, if that be the right estimate, between Hesiod and these early 7th-Century poets, the Greeks, and particularly the Ionian Greeks in close touch—and that connotes self-contrast—with the civilisations of the East, had grown more conscious of themselves, more introspective, with the result that art-poetry and art-song—to use ill-sounding but useful terms—were no longer only the expression of what happened but also of what was felt. This in a sense was a reversion; for Epic itself, as we have seen reason to suppose, was ultimately a development of the primitive incantation, once itself a cry for help, an expression of feeling. But from the point of view of art it was an advance. Art lives by periodic reversion to 'nature.' Moreover the folk-expression, so to call it, of emotion, tends to be tribal, formal, sententious. An ignorant man speaks in metaphors and proverbs; it takes a cultured man to express his own feelings in his own terms. And so although the lost forerunners of these poets went back, as it were, to the people both for the form and the content of the new poetry, it was not from the old popular poetry that they took the personal outlook. Indeed the germ of this is to be seen in Hesiod himself, but it took three or four generations to come to life.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Plat. Laws 812d, Arist. Prob. 9. 39. 921a. 25 (Gevaert); in this ancient approximation to modern 'harmony' the accompaniment took the higher note, Ib. 12. 918a. 37; that it never involved more than two 'parts,' which converged ultimately on the keynote, is clear from Ib. 16. 918b. 30; both melody and accompaniment could be played by a single performer on the double-flute, Apul. Flor. 1; the same was done by the lyre, neither hand being used for 'stopping'; flute-melodies so rendered would presumably have a range only of a 'fifth,' lyre-melodies of an octave <sup>2</sup> it was rather less formal; 'chairing' would be perhaps a nearer parallel

AEOLIAN MELIC

Athenaeus has preserved a fragment of Archilochus in which he speaks of 'leading the Lesbian paean to the flute.' The adjective marks a connexion of great interest. Contemporary with the rise of the Ionian Elegiac and Iambic poetry, or perhaps a little later, comes the rise of the AEOLIAN MELIC.<sup>1</sup>

The instrument of Melic song was originally the lyre. The word μέλος as applied to this sort of song does not occur before Herodotus. In Aleman, who flourished in the latter half of this 7th Century, we find the phrase ἔπη δέ γα καὶ μέλος, meaning 'lines and a tune.' So also Echembrotus speaks of himself early in the 6th Century

CHORAL AND MONODIC SONG

as μέλε' ἢδ' ἐλέγους Ἑλλησιν αἰείδων. And this seemingly older meaning survived along with the other in the 5th and 4th Centuries.<sup>1</sup> It is not unreasonable, then, to suggest that the word μέλος was applied to this sort of poetry at a time when the three others, Epic, Elegiac, and Iambic, had already become mere spoken verse. It meant, in short, tune-poetry.

This poetry, in the very early time when all poetry was normally sung, seems to have arisen as an art-form in Lesbos. The tradition of the head of Orpheus being carried thither by the Hebrus reflects this belief.

Metrically the outstanding difference between Melic poetry and its contemporary art-forms of verse appears to have been that it did not admit resolved feet. The Hexameter and Elegiac, strictly speaking, did so neither, but in them the poet often had the choice between Dactyls and Spondees. It is in this choice that the difference really lies. Early Melic had certain 'freedoms,' as we shall see, but no choice so wide as this. Its line always has the same number of syllables. This peculiarity cannot be dissociated from its longer adherence to the dance. For Choral Melic remained song-dance right through the classical period. Resolution did of course come in, but not for a long time. Melic poetry was divided by 5th-Century custom into two categories, Choral or χορφεῖα and Monodic or μονοφῆα. In the early days this distinction would have been meaningless. In Homer the lyre-player sings and plays to lead the dance; the dancers also sang in certain forms of early Greek poetry, always perhaps in the very earliest; but except in the Paean of Iliad i. 472, the musico-poetical part of the performance centres, for Homer, in the minstrel, and the dance, if there be one—and that 'if' is the beginning of Monodic poetry—seems to be an impromptu reflexion of his words and music, in which the amateurs, if we may so call them, were led by two tumblers. This technical subordination of the dance, which had led even in Homer to Monodic or solo performances without it, was probably connected with the development of the Hymn and its secular offshoot, if such it were, the Epic.

THE LYRE

It is not to be supposed that cult song-dances like the Wedding-Song, Olen's Dance-song to Artemis, and the Dirge for Linus, were impromptu performances; and it is to them more than to the Hymn that we should probably look for the origins of the Choral Melic which comes to light in the 7th Century.

The instruments employed in Choral Melic were both lyre and flute; in Monodic the lyre, except in the Flute-sung Nome, which seems to have been accompanied by a dancing chorus.

The most usual word for the lyre in Homer is φόρμιγξ; κίθαρις is far less common; and λύρα, χέλυς, and βάρβιτος do not occur till later. Of these five words all except βάρβιτος if not Greek are at any rate Indo-European, for it does not seem impossible to connect κίθαρις, or as it appears after Homer κιθάρα, with κίθαρος 'the chest (pectus),' perhaps originally 'breast-bone.' In the Border Ballad of The Two Sisters the harper makes a harp out of the breast-bone of a drowned maiden and strings it with her hair. This, we may believe, though the breast-bone would hardly be a human one as a rule, would be one type of primitive stringed instrument, and the χέλυς or tortoiseshell the other. They would of course retain their names long after they had come to be made of wood. The ancients appear sometimes to have drawn a distinction, associating the κιθάρα with Apollo and the χέλυς or χέλυννα with Hermes. The player of the Linus-Song in Homer is said φόρμιγγι κιθαρίζειν, which seems to show that φόρμιγξ and κίθαρις were identical to Homer's audience. The word λύρα is first found in Archilochus. βάρβιτος and χέλυς perhaps belonged originally to the Aeolic side of Greek Melic, κιθάρα to the Ionic. The 'Lydian' pectis was probably new to Greece in Sappho's day. The differences of name doubtless represent, in most cases, differences in form and in tonal range and pitch.

The reconstitution of the musico-poetical competitions at Delphi in 586 was due, no doubt, to new influences. One of these was clearly a 'boom,' as we should say, in fluteplaying, which is to be connected with the spread of Elegiac poetry; another was probably the spread of Aeolian Melic.

TERPANDER

‘If ever’ says Aelian<sup>1</sup> ‘the Spartans required the aid of the Muses on occasion of general sickness of body or mind or any like public affliction, their custom was to send for foreigners at the bidding of the Delphic oracle, to act as healers and purifiers. For instance they summoned Terpander, Thales [or Thaletas], Tyrtaeus, Nymphaeus of Cydonia, and Alcman.’ Here in 7th-Century Greece is the poet as medicine-man. This, doubtless his original rôle, is reflected earlier by Homer’s epithet ‘divine,’ later by Simonides’ peace-making between Hiero and Theron and by Pindar’s counsels to his patrons, always by the attributes of Apollo. Apollo destroys the presumptuous, helps and heals in time of general need, is the God of prophecy, and the God of the lyre and of song. Moses stayed the plague. But this is by the way. ‘The first establishment of music at Sparta’ says Plutarch<sup>2</sup> ‘was due to Terpander.’ TERPANDER, who flourished in the middle of the 7th Century, is variously described as an Antissaean or Methymnaean of Lesbos, and of Cymè in Aeolis. The last, we may remember, was the birthplace of Hesiod’s father, and according to some accounts Terpander was descended from Hesiod. But his father’s name, Derdenes, is hardly Greek.

According to Pindar,<sup>3</sup> Terpander invented the barbitos ‘at the feasts of the Lydians to vibrate in answer to the sounds (ἀκουῶν, ἀκοῶν) of the low-pitched pectis,’ which apparently refers either to the only type of harmony admitted by Greek music, two concurrent melodies, of which the lower carried the air, both converging finally on a single note (see p. 606, n.), or to the tradition that Terpander added the octave string to the lyre. That he did so, if this is true, at the expense of the ‘third’ note (that is our sixth) in the scale, which he removed, is suggested by several considerations, for instance the statement of Plutarch that the lyre had only seven strings down to the time of Phrynis (c. 450).<sup>4</sup>

Aelian’s list of the lyric poet-musicians who ‘ran’ the official cult-music at Sparta in the latter half of the 7th Century is incomplete. It may be supplemented from Plutarch Mus. 8 (vol. i, p. 7). Some of those mentioned were Dorians, one at least an Ionian, but in the full list there was doubtless a predominance of Aeolians.<sup>1</sup> According to Plutarch, the last Lesbian citharode to win the prize at the Spartan Carneia was Pericleitus, who seems to have flourished about 550. The great days, then, of Spartan patronage of poetry lasted for rather over a century, though it must not be supposed that it now ceased. The Argument to Theocritus (p. 616 n. 3) implies that Maiden-Songs were sung at Sparta as late as the time of the Persian Wars, and the Birds of Aristophanes (11 Schol.) mentions a contemporary victor at the Carneia.

The above passages, even if they stood alone, would prove the early existence of poetico-musical contests (ἀγῶνες) elsewhere than at great religious centres like Delphi. It is doubtless true that there had long been competitions in 'music' and athletics (which it should be remembered were the two great branches of Greek education) in connexion with many local cults all over Greece, and at these hundreds of poet-musician-schoolmasters competed of whom we shall never know the names. All these took part in the development of Greek poetry, and it is a serious error to imagine that the great personages whom we know of are the only factors in the problem of its history.

Some of the most famous poems, which no doubt won prizes at the Carneia during this period, survived not only in books but as folk-songs. 'During the Theban invasion of Laconia (370 B.C.) the Helot prisoners' says Plutarch<sup>2</sup> 'refused to sing at the bidding of their captors the songs of Terpander or Aleman or Spondon the Laconian, on the plea that their masters never allowed it.'

Among the fragments of the poetry ascribed to Terpander we find a Hymn to Zeus and an Hexameter Lyre-sung Nome to Apollo called the Orthian or

POYLMNASTUS: THALETAS: TYRTAEUS

High-pitched.<sup>1</sup> He was also credited with Proems or Preludes, that is Hymns to be followed by Epic Lays, the first-known Scolia or Drinking-Songs, and innovations in rhythm. The Nomes and Proems will be dealt with later (pp. 673 ff.).

On the strength of its metrical similarity to his Spondaic 'Hymn'—probably a Proem—, the ancient view that Terpander invented Drinking-Songs, and the belief that the Spondaic rhythm was so called from σπονδαί 'libations,' editors sometimes ascribe to him the Libation Flute-Song to the Muses and Apollo. A fragment to the Dioscuri written in molossi (— — —) is perhaps his.

There is no trace in Terpander of Iambic or Elegiac, or of the Aeolic rhythms of Sappho and Alcaeus. We unfortunately possess too little of Terpander's work to do more than take his ancient reputation on trust.

The Scolion-tradition was probably carried on by a poet in the same list, the Ionian POLYMNASTUS, whose merry and perhaps obscene Flute-songs were sung at Athens in the time of Cratinus. Polymnastus followed the lead of Clonas, whom Plutarch describes as 'the first composer of Flute-sung Nomes and Processional songs,' and includes with him among the authors of the seven traditional Nomes sung to the flute. To some of the same poets are ascribed Paeans and Elegies. One of them, Thales or THALETAS of Gortyn, who seems to have been the great poet of Crete, was said to have imitated Archilochus, and also to have resuscitated the Paeonic and Cretic rhythms, both of which involve quintuple time, from the old flute-music of Olympus. That this music still existed, if we could but be sure that there was not a second Olympus, would prove a tradition stretching back into the Dark Age. But the Olympus imitated by Thaletas is perhaps not so ancient.

A famous Spartan poet of this period was probably a native of Aphidnae in Attica, TYRTAEUS, called by Suidas' authority a writer of Elegy and a fluteplayer. This was doubtless his chief fame in the later antiquity, but he also composed for the choruses.

SEMONIDES: MIMNERMUS

To judge by the two quoted by the Attic orator Lycurgus—ultimately, it is thought, from a military song-book, a textbook of Spartan education,—his War Elegies or Exhortations resembled those of Callinus in the naïveté and vigour of their appeal. Lycurgus gives the occasion of their use: ‘Whenever the Spartans take the field under arms, every man has by law to be summoned to the king’s tent to hear Tyrtaeus’ songs, this being the surest way of making him willing to die for his country.’ It was the time of the Second Messenian War. Sent by the Athenians at a request the Spartans made them, in obedience to an oracle, that they would send them a general, Tyrtaeus played the part not only of war-poet but virtually, if not in name, of commander-in-chief. We also possess some fragments of his Elegy Eunomia, an exhortation to orderly life. Of his Embateria or Songs of the Battle-Charge a possible example is printed among the Folk-Songs. It should be noted that these Spartan Elegies still preserve the Ionic dialect free, or almost free, of Dorian admixture; the Embateria on the other hand, being anapaestic, are entirely in the Doric, having no foreign tradition to comply with.

The story that Tyrtaeus was a lame schoolmaster need not be rejected. Music was no doubt a part of Athenian education from very early times, and an important part of the musician-poet’s profession must have been to teach his art. Tyrtaeus’ fame was not confined to Sparta. In Plato’s day the young Athenian learnt his songs by heart.

The Ionian Iambic and Elegiac tradition is continued in the latter half of the 7th Century by Semonides of Amorgus, Mimnermus of Colophon, and Solon the Athenian lawgiver. Of these, SEMONIDES uses the Iambic for satire of a gnomic or moralising type, and appears to have composed a History of Samos in Elegiacs. The latter probably at this time would already be recited rather than sung. MIMNERMUS, who, like his fellow-countryman Polymnastus, wrote Flute-sung Nomes, uses the Elegy for poems on such themes as love and the shortness of life.

One of these, or a Book of them, was addressed to his flute-girl—and, one may suppose, accompanist—Nanno, who did not requite his love. Though gnomic in style, the fragments of Mimnermus resemble those of Archilochus in combining the general with the personal; and in reading them we feel ourselves in the presence of the author. 'What would life be, what would pleasure,' he sings, 'without golden Aphrodite?'

Mimnermus has been called the father of the Erotic Elegy. The two streams Iambic and Elegiac unite for the last time in the first truly Athenian poet, the greatest instance of the poet as healer of public ills, SOLON. But we are passing beyond the limits of this book. For our present purpose it must suffice to add that Solon answered Mimnermus' wish that he might die without disease or trouble at the age of sixty, with a poem requesting him to read for sixty, eighty—a story which is useful as marking the Ionian origins of Attic literature, and as illustrating the use of poetry as a medium of criticising another poet, a use which may derive from Archilochus' employment of the Iambic for invective.

Thus the spheres of Elegiac and Iambic have by the end of the 7th Century overlapped, both having probably by that time to some extent dropped the music,<sup>1</sup> becoming, like the Epic, mere recitation-verse, but often still accompanied by an instrument whose rhythm was followed by the reciter. This change would naturally tend to bring the two kinds together. Melic still held apart, and though, as we shall see, it was not always sung, preserved so strongly the traditional connexion of poetry with music and the dance that it actually appears to have restored the dance element to the sphere of art.

Even if we admit the use of the seven-stringed lyre in art before Terpander,<sup>2</sup> early Greek music undoubtedly had a very limited range of tone, and must have relied for its effect more on rhythm and less on melody than modern song. Indeed the lack of rhythmical variety probably contributed much to the disuse of the Hexameter, the Elegiac, and the Iambic, as song-metres; and it may be that Melic took their place chiefly because, being as a new art-form less bound by tradition, it was better able to supply this very want. And the desire for the fullest possible expression of this variety would emphasise the importance of the dance. Another thing which gave Melic an undoubted advantage, at any rate in solo performances—and Epic, Elegiac, and Iambic were by this time all monodic—was that the performer was his own accompanist. This it is that with us causes from time to time the vogue of a new stringed-instrument, the banjo in the last generation, the ukulele in this.

ALCMAN

The later writers of Elegiac and Iambic poetry, Hipponax, Phocylides, Xenophanes, Theognis, do not concern us here. It is enough to note, as a sign of the times, that Xenophanes was a philosopher.

Turning now to the Lyrists, we find in the last quarter of the 7th Century the most popular poet of the Spartan Succession, ALCMAN, whose poems, with the possible exception of Terpander's, alone appear to have survived into Alexandrian times.

With Alcman—whose name is the Doric form of Alcmaeon—Spartan pride showed itself, as with Tyrtæus, in the legend that made a foreigner into a native, and we find in antiquity a conflict based on the disagreement between the popular and literary traditions. It is not unlikely that there was Lydian blood in his veins. There appears to have been close intercourse between the kingdom of Croesus and the Greek islands, notably Lesbos, about this time, but whether Alcman came under the native Lesbian influence as well as that of its offshoot at Sparta is not clear.

His chief work would seem to have been choral, and most of this composed for girl-choirs. Of the Wedding-Songs known to Leonidas of Tarentum no trace survives. The Partheneia or Maiden-Songs were closely akin to the Hymn in purpose, but there the resemblance ceased.

The largest fragment is that of a poem which perhaps contained fourteen or sixteen stanzas, of which we have eight. Of these the first three contain the end of the myth of Heracles' revenge on the sons of Hippocoön, and the last five praise of the chorus and references to the occasion and the hoped-for victory in the competition. The phrase νεάνιδες ἰρήνας ἐράτας ἐπέβαν is either an anticipation of this victory or, perhaps more likely, a reference to the object of the ritual, thanksgiving after war. That peace in that sense particularly affected the Spartan maidens is clear from the Argument to Theocritus (p. 2 l. 7 Wendel).<sup>1</sup> The poem seems to have been sung and danced at dawn in procession to the temple of Orthia. The chorus apparently was composed of cousins, or at least members of the same tribe. What lies behind the comparison of the leader and vice-leader to horses and doves,—ritual, coterie-trick, or traditional type of metaphor—we cannot tell; but it is worth noting that early ivories found in her precinct show Orthia surrounded by birds. Other fragments addressed to the Dioscuri, to Zeus Lycaeus, to Hera, to Artemis, to Aphrodite, may well come from Partheneia.

From these fragments we should judge that these Maiden-Songs began with an address to the Muse and an invocation of the God to whom they were sung. Then came the myth; and then the personal part—praise or banter sometimes in the poet's name and sometimes in the chorus' own—with references to the competition, the prize, the judges, and so on.<sup>2</sup> In one delightful fragment, where Alcman complains that he is getting too old to dance with his maidens, the implication is that in his day, as in that of Archilochus before him, the poet was the ἐξάρχων, the leader of the dance, in more than name. The Love-Songs, of which we have one very charming

<sup>2</sup> fr. 2A, where the girls apparently address the poet, is said to have come at 'the beginning of the 2nd Partheneion'; but the fragment would make a strange beginning, and it is unlikely that the pattern of a ritual ode of this period should have been so elastic; we should perhaps translate 'at the beginning of the 2nd Book of the Partheneia' fragment, were seemingly monodic and secular, following the lead of Polymnastus. Some of these perhaps were recited rhythmically to a kind of lyre (cf. Hesych. κλεψίαμβος). Their occasion would be usually a monodic κῶμος or serenade; some may have been sent as letters. Alcman's Fifth Book was composed of Drinking-Songs, σκόλια or συμποτικά, probably developments of the ritual Libation-Songs some of which seem to have been ascribed to Terpander.

His metres are most commonly Dactylic or Anapaestic, and Iambic or Trochaic, in both cases with the occasional use of Spondees, and in the latter with that of resolved feet. These elements are sometimes combined in the same line. We also find the Cretic (— ∪ —), said to have been introduced at Sparta by Thaletas of Crete, and the Ionic (∪ ∪ —), perhaps brought thither by Polymnastus of Colophon. The occurrence of the Paeon (∪ ∪ ∪ — or — ∪ ∪ ∪) in Alcman is doubtful. Alcman seems to have had a fondness for the Dactylic Tetrameter, which is indeed found in Archilochus, but only combined (in the same line) with other elements; and if we may trust the MSS there are seeming traces in his fragments of that closer combination of Dactyl and Trochee which is sometimes, but incorrectly, called logaoedic,<sup>1</sup> whereas Archilochus keeps these two elements each to its line or part of the line. These details are given here because they show the gradual encroachment of the other metres on the traditional art-form, the Hexameter.

According to Suidas' authority Alcman was the first (if this is the right translation) to adopt the practice of not accompanying the Hexameter with music.<sup>2</sup> Another interesting point is the structure of Alcman's strophes. The Archilochian stanza never exceeds two lines, of which the first is divisible by caesura and the second generally shorter than the first. The stanzas of Alcman, if we may trust the Alexandrian line-division of the 1st Partheneion, <sup>1</sup> the use of the term for any mixture of Dactyls and Trochees is a modern and now mostly discredited extension of its use by Hephaestion for Dactyls with a Trochaic, or for Anapaestics with an Iambic, close range from three lines to six—not fourteen, for the ancient belief that the Triad (strophe, antistrophe and epode) was the invention of Stesichorus is probably not quite correct. The threefold choric arrangement has its early Spartan analogue in the Song of the Three Ages, and a short strophe of four lines followed by an only slightly longer epode of six, is more likely at this early period than a strophe of so many lines as fourteen. But it should be noted that, as in Anacreon and to a great extent too in Sappho and Alcaeus, each strophe consists of a repetition of homorhythmic units; it is probable also that, as with them, the same metrical system occurred in more than one of Aleman's poems. It is interesting to note that the sense always ends with his triad, but not necessarily with his strophe.

Aleman's place as the first of the Nine Lyric Poets was doubtless primarily due to the preservation of his poems into Alexandrian times, and their preservation proves their popularity. The epitaph seen by Pausanias said with pride that his poems 'were not made the less sweet because he used the tongue of Sparta'—which seems to indicate that his dialect was an innovation.

His predecessors, mostly Lesbian, had perhaps run the Aeolic tendencies too strong, and the patriotic objectors (prototypes of the upholders of British music during the late war) welcomed a poet who would put a reasonable amount of Doric into these songs of Dorians. The epitaph is probably not contemporary; but it may have been put up at some time, perhaps during the Peloponnesian War, when Spartan pride in everything Spartan was at its height. The same pride would secure the repeated performance and consequent preservation of his poems, as made him a Spartan instead of a Lydian.

His dialectic innovation, though not so remarkable as would appear at first sight,<sup>1</sup> was doubtless a real advance, but his claim to greatness rested, as we have seen, on greater things.

<sup>1</sup> the late Laconian forms such as  $\sigma$  for  $\theta$  must be due to comparatively late editing; inscriptions show that these changes were not recognised in the spelling of the dialect till some generations after the time of Aleman

ORIGINS OF CHORAL MELIC

It is now time to step back to the early history of Greek CHORAL MELIC. Among the various forms of this kind of poetry are some to which belong certain refrains, ἰήιε παιάν to the Paean, ὦ διθύραμβε to the Dithyramb, ὕμην ὑμέναιε to the Wedding-Song, αἶλινον to the Lament.<sup>1</sup>

These refrains, called by the later Greeks ἐφύμνια and in origin probably identical with the ἐπφῶδες, whose name indeed is sometimes given them, are doubtless the oldest, and probably also the most truly ritual, parts of the song-element in the song-dances in which we find them. The lengthened vowel in two of them, like such forms as μαχεούμενος in Homer, betokens metrical adjustment, perhaps of stress-elements to the conditions of a pitch-language. Without pressing the parallelism unduly, we may note here that some of the old Norse ballads of the Shetlands have come down to us with the body of the stanza in an English translation, but with the refrain—which is comparatively unimportant as mere entertainment—still untranslated. Some of the traditional English carols similarly have the refrain in Latin. It would seem then that the refrain resists change more obstinately than the rest of the song, and the apparently non-Hellenic character of the Greek refrains points to a language shift. It should be noted here that ἰήιε παιάν recalls the Hexameter, and the Hexameter was closely connected with Apollo; while ὦ διθύραμβε is Iambic, and the Iambic was associated with Dionysus as well as Demeter.<sup>2</sup> The song itself was doubtless called after the refrain—παιάν, διθύραμβος, etc.—and not vice versa.

The Refrain in its earliest stage probably arose out of one or both of these elements: (1) the cult cry-and-movement—to use a term more applicable here than song-dance—of the crowd during the performance of a cult-act by one or a few of their number, an act in which most of them could share only vicariously, such as the slaying of an ox; (2) the ‘occupational’ cry-and-movement of a number of people doing the same thing, such as rowing or reaping. In all such 'occupations' unity of movement is advantageous, in some, such as pulling on a rope, it is essential; and to secure this unity in an occupational song-dance—for that is what this cry-and-movement comes to be—we must have a leader. Out of such elements, the man who performed the sacrifice, the man who led the rowers or reapers, was probably evolved the ἐξάρχων or leader-off, who developed by the division of functions so well known to anthropologists into :

(1) The minstrel who played and sang and sometimes danced as well, while the chorus danced singing what they could, namely the refrain, which was always the same; and (2) the χοραγός or dance-leader, of whom there would seem to have been sometimes two, one to each half of the chorus. This occasional division of the chorus is probably due to several causes : (1) there was sometimes difference of age or sex—Olen's Hymn to Eileithyia was sung by boys and danced by girls—; (2) the ancient dance being mimetic, the dancers must often have had to represent two parties, as in a fight or a dispute; (3) non-Hellenic parallels show that among primitive peoples mimetic fights are a way of commemorating the dead, and have developed elsewhere than in Greece into competitions athletic and other.

This duality is probably reflected in some if not all of the following phenomena :

(1) in the Amoebeic Element, question-and-answer or the like, which has its derivatives in the stichomythia of Attic drama as well as in Bucolic poetry; (2) in the Triad—strophe and antistrophe followed by the epode deriving from the refrain, which was sometimes itself called ἐπφδός; (4) in the Competitive Element which persisted in Greek life and literature even into the days of prose,<sup>1</sup> for instance in the Pythian ἀγῶνες at Delphi and the Dionysiac at Athens, and in the song-contests of Theocritus' shepherds. It also comes, this duality, into the Elegy and the Epode or epodic stanza, which only differ from each other in the Elegiac stanza or couplet having a doubled refrain (half-pentameter);

<sup>1</sup> this is the meaning of Thucydides' κτῆμα ἐς αἰεὶ μάλλον ἢ ἀγώνισμα ἐς τὸ παραχρήμα ἀκούειν, 'not for competition but for record for in both, the first metrical element or line is divisible into two parts by the caesura.

If the Refrain, the 'Epode,' originated as we have suggested, whence arose the other part of the stanza? Apparently from the leader's part. In the Dirge for Hector in the Iliad, the speeches of Hecuba, Andromache, and Helen are as it were the leader's parts, and the wails of the women which follow each of them the choric or refrain element; in the earlier half of the same ritual performance, the leader's part is the lament of the minstrels, and the choric part again the wails of the women.<sup>1</sup> The dropping of the dancing chorus as it is dropped in Demodocus' κλέα ἀνδρῶν (but not in the Lay of Ares and Aphrodite) gives us monodic poetry; and this pedigree would seem to indicate that all monodic Greek 'art-poetry,' whether Epic, Elegiac, Iambic, or Melic, was in origin choral. But in some cases the ritual element resisted the tendency to make the performance a mere entertainment, and the dancing chorus, so far from being dropped, became more and more important, eventually taking to itself the leader's part (or the two leaders' parts) as well as the refrain.

This was the birth both of the Triadic arrangement, for instance of Attic drama, and of the Strophic arrangement, for instance of some of Pindar's Epinicia, the former a combination of the refrain or epode with two amoebeic leader's parts, the latter a fusion of it with a single leader's part.

It is significant here that the refrain often extends in Attic tragedy into a little strophe of three or four lines, for instance ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ τεθυμένῳ κτλ., Aesch. Eum. 321-346; and that the last line of the familiar Sapphic stanza was called the Adonian, being metrically identical in all probability with the refrain of the Adonis-Song. There is nothing to show, as is sometimes held, that the Strophic arrangement is older than the Triadic.

The choral cult song-dance, then, which emerges into the art-sphere in the latter half of the 7th Century, had an immemorial past behind it.

<sup>1</sup> whether or no this passage is a late addition, it is sufficiently ancient evidence for our purpose

NEW FORMS

It is to be observed in various stages of development in Homer, Hesiod, and the Homeric Hymns. The processional song-dance of the Muses to Olympus in l. 68 of the Theogony (c. 750 B.C.) was clearly conceived by a man familiar with the Processional Hymn. At l. 515 of the Hymn to the Pythian Apollo (c. 650 B.C.) the Paean is processional, led by Apollo φόρμιγγ' ἐν χείρεσσιν ἔχων ἑρατὸν κιθαρίζων | καλὰ καὶ ὕψι βιβάς, where the last phrase suggests the song-dance. At l. 157 of the much older Hymn to the Delian Apollo (8th Century) Delian maidens sing what is apparently the standing Hymn, like that of classical times, to Apollo and Artemis; but we should note that it is there still followed by the 'renowns of men.' Except perhaps for this feature, this song is essentially a Partheneion. The Wedding Song-dance and the Linus-Dirge song-dance in Homer have been mentioned above. In the Shield of Heracles (7th Century)<sup>1</sup> we have the bridal procession, with a chorus of youths singing to the pipe, and another of maidens dancing to the lyre; and the κῶμος or revel of young men 'some frolicking with dance and song, and others laughing in time with the fluteplayer as they went along.'

From the earliest form of the Hymn developed in all probability, as we have seen, the Epic Lay, the Hymn proper, and, as we shall see later, the Nome. Greek Choral Melic seems to have been derived from a later 'return,' so to speak, to the 'non-art' forms, ritual and once-ritual forms which had long existed side by side with the art-forms, but which hitherto had not been drawn upon by professional poet-musicians. In the 8th and 7th Centuries these 'non-art' forms, folk-forms, made a number of contributions to the art-sphere, where the two-time Hexameter had so long reigned supreme.

These were: (1) new metres and rhythms, for instance the three-time Iambic, Molossus, Ionic, the five-time Paeon and Cretic,<sup>2</sup> the Elegiac couplet; (2) new subjects or topics, for instance, lamentation, banter and invective,

<sup>1</sup> l. 270      <sup>2</sup> sometimes, by the lengthening of the first long syllable, the Cretic was adapted to what we call 6/8 time (or a double bar of 3); this adaptation is parallel to that of the ordinarily two-time Dactyl to predominantly Trochaic metres, which were usually three-time or rather six-time exhortation with its offshoot 'moralising,' that is general reflexion on men and things (these new topics and their traditional metrical associations led the way to the personal poem of which we find examples even in Archilochus, and to the personal element in the Choral Melic such as Alcman's Partheneion); (3) the resuscitation, as an art-form, of the song-dance.

RITUAL SONG-DANCE OUTSIDE THE EPIC

Apart from the evidence of Homer, Hesiod, and the Homeric Hymns, there is much to show that ritual song-dance had long existed in Greece.

The Megarians used to send a chorus of fifty youths and maidens to Corinth whenever one of the Bacchiad family died. This was not only the family of Archias founder of Syracuse (740 B.C.) but one of the Spartan royal families, and therefore very ancient. Singers and dancers are figured on a 'Dipylon' bowl. This Dipylon pottery, found at Athens, belongs to the 9th or 8th Century. We may compare too the Elean women's Hymn to Dionysus, and with it a passage of Pausanias (5. 16. 6) about the Heraean women's games or competitions: 'The Sixteen Women (chosen two from each tribe) also get up two choruses, one called the chorus of Physcoa, the other the chorus of Hippodameia. This Physcoa, they say, was a native of the Vale of Elis who bore Dionysus a son Narcaeus, and she and her son were the first to worship Dionysus.' These were no doubt choruses of women. Herodotus speaks of ancient invective choral song-dances of women at Aegina. There are also the Attic τραγῳδοί or vintage-singers, from which came Attic comedy, and the τραγικὸν χοροῖ held in honour of Adrastus at Sicyon.

Ritual song-dance, then, was very ancient; yet apart from prehistoric figures such as Olen, we do not hear of it in connexion with what we may call professional poets till Eumelus, and after him there is a gap of a century. Nor do we find it, in its 'pre-art' stage, connected with any particular God. When, however, it emerges as an art-form in the 8th and 7th Centuries, we find it associated with Apollo.

This is natural enough; for the only professional poetry up to that time had been connected with the worship of Apollo and the Muses, and the only known periodic competition of poets which we can call prehistoric is the contest which Pausanias tells us was founded at Delphi in the days of Chrysothemis and Philammon. For the chorus in the ancient ritual of Apollo we have clear evidence in the Paean in Homer, in Olen's Hymn to Eileithyia, in the local Delian partheneia mentioned in the Homeric Hymn to the Delian Apollo, and in the χοροί sent to Delos as mentioned by Thucydides and the προσόδιον of Eumelus for the Messenians.

The chorus had probably been connected with the Pan-Dorian Apollo-festival of the Carneia in all Dorian communities from time immemorial, but had degenerated at Sparta into mere folk-ritual till the second revival of music, that by Thaletas in the 7th Century. If Terpander's earlier revival dealt with Choral Melic, we do not know of it. We find Thaletas credited, as we have seen, with the introduction of the Cretic and Paeonic rhythms and with the composition of song-dances for the choruses of the Three Ages at the Gymnopaediae. Tyrtaeus wrote for the same choruses, and also, as has been said above, composed Elegies for the flute. This brings us down to Alcman, with whom we have fully dealt already.

The Aeolian tradition deriving from Terpander, which supplied Sparta with a long line of poets mostly Lesbian, produced before the end of this wonderful 7th Century the two great Lesbian lyrists SAPPHO and ALCAEUS. Among Alcaeus' ten Books probably only one was choral, the Hymns; among Sappho's nine <sup>1</sup> we find one comprising Epithalamies, and the contents of the others seem to have been mainly monodic.

Besides this new predominance of solo-song, we find new rhythms, some of which are familiar to us because they were adopted and adapted by Horace. Besides these distinctively Aeolic metres both poets used the Hexameter—but showing peculiarities which may well be pre-Homeric—,<sup>2</sup> and Sappho's eighth Book contained

‘NEW’-LESBIAN FORMS

Iambics, probably including Trochaics; but whether these were plain trimeters and tetrameters or combinations such as we find in Archilochus, we do not know.

One of the outstanding features of the new Aeolic verse is the entire absence of resolution and of groups of three short syllables. It can hardly therefore derive from the same source as the Paeon (~~~~), which was Cretan, nor as the Choree or Tribrach (~~~) which was Phrygian. Another peculiarity is the Choriamb (—~~~~). The ‘true’ Choriamb, composed as it were<sup>1</sup> of a Dactyl plus an extra-long syllable, occurs only in Asclepiad metres. It is equivalent to two bars, or one-and-two-thirds bars, of three-time.<sup>2</sup> In Glyconics and kindred metres the presence of the Choriamb is merely a question of syllable-division; it may be there, but it is not necessary to postulate it. The Ionic rhythms involving the feet ~~~— and —~~~, as their name suggests, are something quite different. The Ionic, like the Molossus (———), is equivalent to one bar of three-time. This, and perhaps the Glyconic, occur in Alcman. These metres may therefore have come earlier than the others into Lesbian art-poetry. Whatever their ultimate source, the Ionic certainly, in view of its name, and the Glyconic probably, because of its so frequent use by Anacreon, came through Ionian channels. The ‘Sapphic’ stanza with its ‘epode’ called Adonian, which occurs in the refrain of the Elean Hymn to Dionysus, in the cry  $\tilde{\omega}$  ἴτε Βάκχαι in Euripides, and in one form of the refrain of the Paeon,  $\tilde{\omega}$  ἴε παιάν, and the Asclepiads, used by Sappho in a choral song involving question and answer between a girl-choir and Cytherea, point to connexion certainly with folk-hymns, perhaps with a traditional Adonis-Song. The Glyconic (of which Alcman’s 130. 5 is an uncertain example, as it follows two iambic dimeters), in view of Catullus’ Epithalamium in the Glyconic-Pherecratic stanza, certain similar hymeneal fragments of Sappho and Euripides (Troad. 323 ff.), and the rhythm of the Wedding refrain,  $\tilde{\omega}$  ὕμην ὕμναιε, may perhaps be derived from an even more ancient Marriage-song. The worship of Adonis, mentioned first by Hesiod, seems to have come from Semitic sources through Cyprus. Some of these new-Lesbian metres, for instance the

‘NEW’-LESBIAN FORMS

‘Sapphic’ and ‘Alcaic,’ to judge by their remaining so long without imitation, were perhaps peculiarly suited to the Aeolic accentuation; for the dialect-accent must have emphasised the particular character of an Aeolian or Dorian song even more than the ‘mode’ in which it was sung.<sup>1</sup>

Another peculiarity of Aeolic verse is that its arrangement is always strophic, never triadic, even in choral poetry. Even poems consisting entirely of similar lines, the prototypes of such odes as Horace’s Maecenas atavis edite regibus, were considered in Alexandrian times to be made up of two-line strophes. This would hardly have been an invention of the Alexandrian editors. The Triadic arrangement, which, it should be remembered, involved by custom the construction of a different metrical system for every poem, is to be recognised, as we have seen, in Aleman’s Partheneion, but in the home of the Lesbian tradition, as far as our scanty evidence goes, it never appears. It was probably a Dorian feature. Compare the Song of the Three Ages. We may remark here that, although these Lesbian poems were written in strophes like a modern church-hymn, the music, that is to say the notes as apart from the rhythm, must have changed completely from strophe to strophe. The repetition was metrical not tonal. The same is probably true of all Greek lyric. If it had been otherwise, the overlapping of the sense from strophe to strophe and even—

<sup>1</sup> these modes (ἀρμυρίαι, tunings of the lyre) were a series of limited ‘scales’ of 7 (or 8) notes differing from one another mainly, but probably not entirely, in relative pitch; each of the series began one note higher than its predecessor; each could be either in the ‘chromatic’ or the ‘diatonic’ scale, according to the position of the semitones; they had various emotional associations, much as we roughly associate grief with the ‘minor’ and joy with the ‘major’; they were named after their origin (to arrange them from ‘low’ to ‘high’) Lydian, Phrygian, Dorian, Aeolian, Ionian, but this nomenclature eventually underwent considerable change, e.g. the Aeolian became the Hypodorian, and the Mixolydian (said to have been invented by Sappho) was added below the Lydian; the Dorian and Aeolian were traditionally proper to Choral and Monodic lyric respectively, the Phrygian to flute-music and the Dithyramb, the Lydian to laments, the Ionian to love and pleasure; anyone who has an ‘absolute’ sense of pitch, and has played an elaborate piece of music he knows well on a piano tuned a tone or a tone-and-a-half lower than his own, will realise the possibility of this difference of emotional association as in Pindar—from triad to triad, would hardly have been possible. Moreover Greek music took account of the pitch-accent, at any rate, it would seem, till the mid-5th Century,<sup>1</sup> and this was ignored in Greek metre till stress began to resume its sway in the language. The dance, on the other hand, where dance there was, could remain essentially the same throughout, though there could be, and doubtless was, much variety of action without any change of the actual steps.

‘NEW’-LESBIAN FORMS

Other notable features of Lesbian poetry are the frequency of alternatives such as ὄρρανος and ὄρανος, which, however they should be spelt, may be reckoned historically correct—both standing for ὄρFavos; and the lengthening of certain consonants for metrical purposes, for instance ὀννῶπιε. Both these features have their parallels in Homer, where dialectical considerations point to their belonging to the Aeolic element. The metrical lengthenings, at any rate, are in all probability survivals of an early stage of Greek or pre-Greek poetry when the rules of quantity had not worked themselves out, but words were simply grouped roughly in rhythms. The initial ‘freedoms’ ≡ ≡ or ≡, found in certain Aeolic lines and also in Vedic poetry, may well be equally archaic. As in ordinary speech, rhythmic fixity doubtless began in Greek poetry and its forbears at the end of the unit. This rough grouping into rhythms is most easily conceived of as taking place at a stage in the growth of the language when stress was the predominant form of accentuation, when the rhythms were stress-rhythms as in the lyre (and piano), not length-rhythms as in the flute (and organ). And the fact that there were two quintuple or five-time feet called Paeon, — — — — — and ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ (or — ~ ~ ~), the first of which is conceivably that of the earliest form of the refrain of the Paeon, ἰηπαῖδων, can better be accounted for by supposing them twin descendants of a foot of five beats than of five lengths.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> compare Dion. Hal. Comp. 11 on a ‘chorus’ of Euripides with the Delphian ‘Hymns’ to Apollo; this disregard of the pitch-accent was clearly one of E.’s innovations (cf. Ar. Frogs 1313 ff.) which was not followed by the conservatives; it would tend to make it less easy for the audience to follow the words, and doubtless contributed to the resuscitation of the monodic, and therefore more easily intelligible, Lyre-Sung Nome (see p. 673) <sup>2</sup> cf. Aristox. ap. Ox. Pap. 9 col. 4, where the possibility of a Paeon of five shorts is suggested

‘NEW’-LESBIAN FORMS

If this is right, the absence of resolved feet from Lesbian verse seems natural enough. The unit was traditionally the syllable, not the short syllable, and consequently it would not occur to anyone to substitute two shorts for one long. That would come in later as the stress-tradition faded away and the increasing use of the flute, with its ‘sustained’ rather than ‘percussive’ sound, supported that growing reliance on variation of length rather than of loudness which was natural to the art-rhythms of a pitch-language.<sup>1</sup> Last, but not least, Lesbian poetry speaks its own language. Tyrtaeus mixes, though indeed rarely, with the traditional Ionic of the Elegy the Doric of his audience; Aleman allows the Aeolic which we may take it was traditional in the Sparto-Lesbian Succession to colour the Doric which he was praised for substituting for it; Sappho and Alcaeus throw off the foreign yoke and write as they spoke.<sup>2</sup>

Here then we have clear evidence of the incorporation into Greek poetry of a fresh tradition, which eventually combined with those of Thaletas and Polymnastus and produced the great lyrics of Pindar and Aeschylus. Some of its elements may well be due to Lydian influence, old and new. Terpander introduced the pectis from Lydia; Sappho was the first to use the Mixolydian ‘mode.’ Others were native, we may suppose, to Lesbos. The avoidance of three concurrent short syllables is, as we have seen, essentially Greek.<sup>3</sup> In any case it was doubtless derived, most of it, from the ‘folk,’ among whom, always open indeed to foreign influence, an influence which in the days of slavery was felt in every household but the very humblest,<sup>4</sup> it had nevertheless preserved features both of the songs the early Greek colonists had brought with them to Lesbos, and of those they had found there when they came.

A CHANGED OUTLOOK

The causes of this incorporation, whether it was made by Sappho and Alcaeus or, what is more likely, their immediate but unknown <sup>1</sup> predecessors, are to be looked for in changing circumstances and a changing outlook. For one thing, the introduction of coinage had but recently given its great stimulus to commerce, and the accumulation of wealth had begun to give men freer command of the labour of their fellows. This showed itself not only in the multiplication of 'tyrannies' throughout Greece, but in the conflicts between nobles and commons, as for instance at Mytilene. Sappho, who was banished by the democratic dictator Pittacus, was of high birth, and her husband a very rich man who came from Andros: her brother accumulated enough wealth as a trader in wine to buy the notorious courtesan Doricha 'at a high price.' It is natural in such circumstances—in Greece—that poets should get more to do. We may believe that ritual song-dance, particularly if, as it often was, it was competitive, gave opportunity for the display of wealth. Wealth made the individual, with his greater command of others' hands, a greater person than his neighbours, a more important wheel in the machine of state. This feeling of importance would seem to have expressed itself in art-patronage, and fostered a demand for poetic praise of men as well as of Gods.

The first portrait statue—of a victorious Spartan athlete at Olympia—appears in 628, the first Encomium among the fragments of Alcaeus. These Eulogies were doubtless a development of an old feasting-custom not unconnected with the Homeric 'renowns of men' on the one hand and the ritual Libation-Song on the other. The Love-Song, found, as we have seen, already in Aleman, was a specialised development, we may take it, of the same originals; its sister the Epinicion or Song of Congratulation for victory in the Games is found—but as a ‘Hymn’<sup>2</sup> to Heracles celebrating the poet’s own success—as early as Archilochus. To the same family doubtless belongs the Scolion or Drinking-Song, whose origin, as we have seen, was ascribed to Terpander.<sup>1</sup> This too is found in Aleman as well as in Alcaeus. Alcaeus’ Stasiotica, Political Songs, were probably separated from his Drinking-Songs by the Alexandrian editors merely because of their subject. We have an iambic tetrameter in Alcaeus, and, as we saw just now, Sappho’s eighth Book was called The Iambics. Whether or not the traditional metre of invective was commonly used by both, the lampooning spirit is in some of the Stasiotica of Alcaeus and in Sappho’s lines To a Woman of No Education.

THE TWO LESBIANS

During the 7th Century the whole Greek view of life had become more individualistic, more self-conscious, more analytic.<sup>2</sup> Poets now sang more about their own feelings, and addressed themselves to the emotions of individuals as well as to those of collective audiences. The sphere of art-activities was enlarged to include private life. The old customs of the feast became the proper subject of high art, and high art took over with the customs the folk-metres which belonged to them. This is doubtless why these new metrical forms emerged in Lesbian poetry, and why too, though new to the world of art, they are so remarkably archaic in colouring. But this was not all. Archilochus is said to have invented the custom of ‘reciting some of the Iambics to music and singing others.’ Thus begins the divorce of poetry from song. And when poetry has once become possible apart from music, it has taken the first step towards becoming a thing written rather than a thing spoken. The written epitaph is to the lament, the written love-poem to the serenade, as the written message is to direct speech.

Even in Archilochus there are fragments which might come from letters; Alcaeus writes from exile to his friend Melanippus; Sappho's so-called Hymn to Aphrodite may be best interpreted as a love-letter; her scolding Ode to the Nereïds could hardly have been sung to Charaxus with lyre-accompaniment; we may well believe that Horace, in imitating the style and matter of the Lesbian poetry, imitated also its occasions, and some of his Odes are unmistakably letters, for instance I. 20, an answer to Maecenas' request for an invitation to the Sabine farm. Moreover in a new fragment of Sappho there is some trace of the poem of reflexion, in which the audience, as it were, is the writer himself.

These uses of poetry indicate again an increase of individualism and self-consciousness.

Among the remains of Alcaeus, besides the songs mentioned above, we find Hymns and War-Songs. All his forms, except the Hymns, were probably developments of the songs sung either at feasts or after the company had broken up and lovers sought their mistresses. Many were doubtless sung at table, some outside the loved one's door,—and some, as we have seen, were sent as letters. These occasions, we may take it, were not confined to men. Women were not kept in the background in Lesbos, or Sappho would not have had sufficient political influence to deserve banishment. Indeed the evidence goes to show that the seclusion of high-born women in Greece was Ionian rather than Dorian or Aeolian. Even at Athens, to judge by certain of Aristophanes' comedies, it was probably not so complete as is generally believed.

This is not the place to attempt an estimate of the influence exercised by these two Lesbians, direct or through their imitators, on the culture of the western world. We know what Dionysius thought of Alcaeus, what Plato thought of Sappho. To many moderns, Sappho, like Plato himself, is one of those great of the earth to whom one returns again and again to find them ever greater. For all the answers to the question, "Why are these two poets—and Sappho, of course, in particular—so attractive to us?" we may indeed go far, but some of them are near and plain. First, of these more than of any ancient singer it is true to say that we find ourselves dealing with poets rather than poems, with persons rather than books. The curve of individualism reaches its peak in the self-revelation of Sappho. Secondly, and here again Sappho outshines her contemporary, they are masters, even among the Greeks, of the art of putting a thing briefly without making it bald, gracefully without making it untrue, simply without making it undignified. Thirdly, theirs is almost entirely free of the mannerisms of phrase which cause most other early Greek poetry, beautiful as it often is, to smack of the sophistication that comes of a long tradition. Fourthly and lastly, great as Greek Choral poetry could be, it was in its essence tribal, and that means bound up with national customs and habits of thought which to us are mere matter of history; the Lesbian Monodies, on the other hand, are concerned with the unchanging elements of man's individual life,—birth, feasting, friendship, love, war, ambition, exile, rest after strife, sleep, death. Good poems on such themes, in whatever language they may be written, to whatever time they may belong, ask of us no effort of the imagination; they go straight home.

In the first quarter of the 6th Century, when Alcaeus and Sappho were still singing in Lesbos, and Alcman still perhaps training girl-choruses at Sparta, there was a stir, as has been already said, among the fluteplayers, which caused the inclusion in the Pythian contests of Flute-sung Elegy and Flute-playing pure and simple. Of these two 'events' only the latter survived the first meeting, but elsewhere the flute continued to be the instrument proper to Elegy, and SACADAS of Argos was famous for both types of Nome, the Flute-sung, αὐλοδική, and the Flute-played, αὐλητική. Of the former we have mention of a Taking of Troy, and of the latter we hear of the Pythian Nome, a musical representation, in five 'movements,' of the fight between Apollo and the Serpent. Sacadas is mentioned with Thaletas as an innovator in rhythm. Another recorded name of this period, XANTHUS, is famous as that of the earliest known composer of an Oresteia, probably a Lyre-Sung Nome.

The life of STESICHORUS of Locri, called of Himera (if that be the solution of the puzzle of his identity), who was reckoned of the Nine Great Lyric Poets, would seem to lie between 630 and 550. He drew for themes upon his predecessor Xanthus, and his Lyre-Sung Nomes, if these they were, owed something to (the younger?) Olympus.

He is connected in various passages of ancient authors not only with Himera and Locri (or Mataurus) but with Acragas and with the Arcadian town of Pallantium, whence he is said to have been banished to Catana in Sicily, the place of his burial. He seemingly did not belong to the half-Lesbian school of Sparta, and though he was contemporary with Sappho and Alcaeus, shows no trace of what we may call the new-Lesbian tradition.

His poems, arranged at Alexandria in twenty-six Books, ran some of them to more than one, though we hear of no generic titles but Hymns, Paeans and Love-Songs. He calls his Helen a Proem or Prelude, and his Calycè, which became a folk-song among the women of Greece, can hardly perhaps have been choral. The longer poems, as we shall see, were probably Lyre-Sung Nomes, divided perhaps into long episodes.<sup>1</sup> Such Monodies, as they seem to have been, would have the advantage over Choral poetry, as Timotheus saw many years after, in being more easily heard as words, and therefore more suitable <sup>1</sup> the omission of his name by Proclus on the Nome is not conclusive against this view; he also omits Corinna; moreover the Nome and the Prelude were often confused (see below, p. 674); that they were Dithyramb is hardly possible at this early stage of the Dithyramb's development; but some of them may have been Hymns, since Clement calls Stesichorus the inventor of the Hymn as mere entertainment. The nature of the Nome will be discussed later. Meanwhile it should be noted that, apart from his 'invention' of the Triad, Stesichorus' fame seems to have rested on his power as a narrator. 'Longinus,' Quintilian, Antipater of Sidon, all compare him to Homer. Simonides speaks of the two in the same breath. The age of the tyrants was soon to see a repetition of that characteristic of the age of the kings, the court-poet. The mantle of the singer of the old Epic Lay had already fallen on the singer of the new Lyric Tale. But as yet, like the Lesbian Succession at Sparta, the poet was patronised by the state. We may compare Stesichorus' advice to the Agrigentines to beware of Phalaris, and his remark to the Locrians that they must not prove wanton, or the crickets would chirp from the ground.<sup>1</sup> The style here is reminiscent of the Delphic oracle. Stesichorus is still the medicine-man, the Hebrew prophet, the spiritual power rather in the state than of it.

The subjects of his poetry include, besides the myths of the Epos, certain love-tales—gathered presumably from the lips of the people—which are of great interest because they furnished models to the Alexandrian poets. Stesichorus' Daphnis was the forerunner of Theocritus' Song of Thyrsis, and may well be an ancestor, through the Greek Novel, of modern Romance.

The metres of his few extant fragments show some combination of Dactylic with Trochaic, especially in the 'epitritic' close (— — — —), but the two-time Dactylic greatly predominates. Only in the Rhadina, which Strabo thought to be wrongly ascribed to him, do we find any possible trace of new-Lesbian influence.

To Stesichorus is perhaps due the beginning of the structural expansion, both metrical and syntactical, which we see on comparing an ode of Pindar with an ode of Alcaeus. Whether we should accept the ancient belief that he invented the Triad, is doubtful. His name, which is a nickname, indeed proves that he made some great advance in Choral Melic, and Suidas' authority declares that all his poetry was 'epodic.' Yet the very length of some of his poems points to Monody, and it seems well-nigh impossible, particularly in view of the new fragments of Ibycus, to regard the arrangement of Alcman's Partheneion as anything but triadic. The problem of priority of invention often remains unsolved to-day, with all the relevant documents available. In this case the internal evidence is almost none, and the external slight and indirect or else of questionable authority.

But there is no doubt that this Dorian who inspired Euripides the tragic poet and Polygnotus the painter, who was parodied by Aristophanes and sung at Athenian banquets, and whose choral achievements became the proverbial test of a Greek's claim to have been educated, was a very great man.

The next great name comes a generation later. IBYCUS is for many reasons an interesting figure. This Dorian poet, who in so many ways resembles Stesichorus, and whose works were sometimes confused with his, refused to become tyrant of his native city, the half-Doric, half-Ionic Rhégium, and not only withdrew to the Ionian court of Aiaces at Samos but, as we now know, dedicated his poems (or a Book of his poems) to his son and successor Polycrates. This shows very clearly the power to which a poet could still attain by virtue of what we may call the medicine-man tradition. It was used either to thwart the power of the commercial tyrant, or, as Alcaeus used it, to rally the aristocrats against the rising middle-class. And it is characteristic of the age that the same man who was offered the supreme power in his birthplace, is the first recorded instance, after the Heroic Age, of a court-poet.

Ibycus' metres bear a close resemblance to those of Stesichorus. They are mainly combinations of Dactyl and Trochee with the Dactyl predominating. The structure of his poems, some of which we now know to have been triadic, shows no advance on Alcman. But we see for the first time a certain sign of the spread of the new-Lesbian influence, the Choriamb. The same influence is probably to be traced in the personal note that sounds in the beautiful fragments of the Love-Poems which made his chief claim to immortality. It is clear that in losing Ibycus we have lost much, perhaps even a 'male Sappho.' Whether these Love-Poems were Monodies we do not know. Some of them certainly contained myths. But human nature as well as the Aeolian connexion makes it unlikely that they were all Choral. If the authorship of Stesichorus' Funeral Games of Pelias was sometimes attributed to him, it would seem probable that Ibycus wrote similar narrative poems, some of which may have been Monodic. The triadic arrangement of the poem dedicated (or dedicatory) to Polycrates would seem to imply that it was performed by a chorus as an Encomium or Eulogy, a development of the κῶμος of which we have already had examples—but Monodic examples—in Alcaeus. Some of the Love-Songs were probably of the same type. We hear of no Hymns or Paeans, though we have one mention of a Dithyramb. Of this we shall speak later.

The dedication to Polycrates is to be noted as a personal ending to a Choral and impersonal song. It marks the growing tendency to employ art-choral to honour an individual, a tendency which appears later in the Eulogies and Epinicia of Simonides and Pindar.

The new-Lesbian influence is very clearly marked in the fragments of a poet who sang at the same court. The long life of the Ionian ANACREON, beginning before the middle of the 6th Century, continued well into the 5th.

He probably died at Athens about 488. Aeschylus' first tragedy was staged in 499. Anacreon's life seems to have been spent at his birthplace Teos, at Abdera whither he went with his countrymen when they emigrated to Thrace rather than submit to the Persians, at the court of Polycrates at Samos, at Athens at the court of the Peisistratids, at the house of the Thessalian noble Echecratidas, and again at Athens under the democracy.

Antiquity seems to have possessed his works in five Books, the first three probably comprising his

ANACREON

Lyric poetry, the fourth his Iambic, and the fifth his Elegiac. Among his Elegies were Drinking-Songs, Epitaphs and other Inscriptions, and perhaps invective.

The use of metre for inscriptions was a survival of the very early days when all 'literature,' all that is that was composed for record or repetition, tended to be metrical, partly through long association with the dance, and partly because verse—which is not at that stage distinguishable from song—aids the memory. That the early Greek inscriptions were first in Hexameters <sup>1</sup> and then in the Elegiac metre,<sup>2</sup> points to the early separation—in this order—of Epos and Elegy from music. These were now the natural speech-metres.

One of Anacreon's Inscriptions appears to have been written for the grave of a fellow-countryman who fell in the battle which broke the resistance of the natives of Abdera; another is the dedication of a votive effigy for the victory of the horse of Pheidolas of Corinth at Olympia. The subjects of the Iambics seem to have been various, but all personal, and many of them, as would be expected, satirical. The most famous of these is the charming little piece, composed perhaps at Abdera, to the Thracian coquette. This must have been either sent as a letter, or sung—or recited—at a drinking-bout, perhaps both.

The metres of this Book owe much to the tradition of Archilochus, but also, like those of Ibycus, betray the new-Lesbian strain by the use of Choriambis. It is to be noted that the only two extant poems of any length are divisible into strophes of two and three lines respectively. The Melic poetry included Hymns, Love-Songs—one at least in the form of a Hymn—, Partheneia, and (what adds the last and most lasting touch to the traditional picture of this lover of lads, lasses, wine, and music) songs of regret for past youth. The Choral poems, of which we have the little Hymn dedicating a temple or statue of Artemis at the Ionian Magnesia, and a new and doubtfully restored fragment from the Maiden-Songs, show no advance in elaboration on those of Ibycus. The metre, however, instead of being mainly Dactylic, is Glyconic, Choriambic, and Ionic, all new-Lesbian characteristics; and the poems appear to be arranged sometimes in homorrhhythmic strophes of uneven length. The entire absence of the Triad may be an accident.

The fragments of the Melic songs of love and wine, in which Anacreon's self-revelation comes second only to Sappho's, but which, to judge by Horace's words in the Ode Velox amoenum, included narrative poems, have less fire and more sweetness than those of Ibycus. Though the serious note is not always absent from them, they seem to betoken a man who often played with love rather than loved, and, as we should expect in such a man, invective has here spread beyond its traditional spheres both of metre and occasion. Among them, for the first time, we find the Anacreontic or Half-Iambic metre, really a type of Ionic, which enjoyed so great a vogue with the late imitators on whom rests Anacreon's modern reputation. Of his fame in 5th-Century Athens there can be no question:

'On the Athenian Acropolis' says Pausanias (i. 25) 'are statues of Pericles son of Xanthippus and of his father also who fought the Persians at Mycalé. Near Xanthippus stands Anacreon of Teos, the first poet excepting Sappho of Lesbos to make his chief theme love. The statue represents him as one singing in his cups.'

The latter half of the 6th Century brought the beginnings of a change which proved of capital importance in the history of the world, the rise of Athens as the intellectual centre of Greece. Peisistratus or his sons collected the first recorded library, saw to the editing of Homer and Hesiod, and regulated the performance of the rhapsodes at the Panathenaic Festival; Hipparchus brought Anacreon to Athens and made Simonides, as we shall see, a court-poet; the young Pindar was sent to Athens to learn his art; within a generation of the death of Anacreon Athens had become the home of the philosopher Anaxagoras. Among the foreigners befriended by

SIMONIDES

Hipparchus was LASUS of Hermionè in Argolis, Melic poet, teacher of the lyre, and musical theorist.<sup>1</sup>

He seems indeed to have been the first writer on the theory of music, to have improved the lyre by giving it a more extensive and more finely divided scale, and to have given new life to the Dithyramb—whose history is reserved for a later page—both by enlarging its metrical and tonal scope, and by making its performance competitive.

He clearly had much to do, after the fall of the Peisistratids, with the extension or institution of the intertribal contests in music and poetry by which Cleisthenes sought to establish his constitution in the affections of the people.

Though his Choral poetry seems to have survived into the Alexandrian age, we have only the first three lines of his Hymn to the Hermionian Demeter, and references, both of which throw doubt on their genuineness, to an asigmatic ode entitled The Centaurs and a Book of Dithyrambs.

His later reputation may be measured by his having been accorded a place among the Seven Wise Men, and his contemporary fame by Pindar's flute-master's choice of him to instruct his pupil in the lyre.

A then somewhat similar but now far more famous figure in the Athenian life of that day is the first Pan-Hellenic poet, SIMONIDES.

Born about 555, he seems to have spent his youth and early manhood in his birthplace, the Ionian island of Ceos; then to have lived under the patronage of Hipparchus at Athens; and after the fall of the Peisistratids to have migrated to Thessaly, where he lived with one or other of the great nobles. In the year 506 or soon after, he wrote an Epitaph for the Athenians who died in the operations against Chalcis, and early in the new century accepted the new order and returned to Athens to live under the democratic régime.

SIMONIDES

Like Lasus, he seems to have thrown himself into the musico-poetical side of the popular movement, and is recorded as having won a victory as poet and chorus-trainer in the year after the battle of Marathon. At the age of eighty he won his fifty-sixth prize for the Dithyramb. He wrote the inscription for the new statues of Harmodius and Aristogeiton set up in 477. Friend of the foremost Athenian Themistocles and of the foremost Spartan Pausanias, he now wrote Epitaphs, Dirges, and other poems of the war, some of them in competition with other poets such as Aeschylus, some, we may believe, by direct commission. The last few years of his long life were spent at the court of Hiero of Syracuse, the resort at that time of his nephew Bacchylides, of Pindar, and of Aeschylus. In the year 475 his influence with Hiero, his fame in Sicily, and the traditional respect paid to poets as healers of discord, were such that he made peace in the field between the armies of Hiero and Theron of Acragas before a blow had been struck.

Besides his fame as a poet, Simonides enjoyed in antiquity the reputation of having invented the art of mnemonics, some system, presumably, of memory-training; and also of having added certain letters to the alphabet, a tradition founded perhaps on his having set the fashion at Athens, as a popular Ionian poet well might do, of employing the Ionic alphabet, which seems to have come into vogue in Attic literature in the middle of the 5th Century, though it did not supersede the old alphabet officially till the first year after the Peloponnesian War.

For us Simonides lives in his noble Epitaphs of the Persian War, in his great little Dirge for the heroes of Thermopylae, and in his incomparable Danaë. These rank with the fragments of Sappho, the Parthenon, and the Dialogues of Plato as the finest living flowers of the Greek genius.

Hymns, Paeans, Prayers, Dithyrambs—these to the Gods; Dirges, Epinicia, Eulogies, Inscriptions—these to men; such was the ancient classification of his works. Suidas' notice mentions as his most famous Elegiac poems

SIMONIDES

The Kingdom of Cambyses and Darius, The Sea-fight with Xerxes, The Sea-fight off Artemisium; as his most famous lyric poem The Sea-fight at Salamis; and includes among his works a Book of Tragedies. His Ἀτακτοὶ Λόγοι were perhaps a sort of Mime. Among the Eulogies, besides that on Salamis, were Elegiac poems on the battles of Marathon and Plataea. Among the Inscriptions, besides War-Epitaphs, are lines for the tomb of the daughter of Hippias, for one of the Alcmaeonids, for the runner Dandes of Argos, for Lycas a Thessalian hound. The same Book contained dedications for votive-offerings for victories over Chalcis, over the Persians off Artemisium, over the Carthaginians at Himera and the Etruscans off Cumae; for the altar of Zeus Eleutherios at Plataea; for the statues of winning athletes; for a painting by Polygnotus at Delphi.<sup>1</sup>

None of Simonides' Melic poetry seems to have been Monodic. In the fragments of his Choral works we find for the first time the common Lyric dialect of speech—and one may almost add, of metre—which seems, like the common Epic dialect which generations before had been the first literary expression of the unity of the Greek race, to have arisen as part of the new emphasis in that unity brought about by the Persian Wars.

Neither in speech, metre, nor structure is there any notable distinction to be made between these fragments and the 'choruses' of Attic drama. Some of the Epitaphs show Doric forms rather than the traditional Ionic when they are written for Dorians; the Melic dialect does not vary. Here too for the first time we find the Triad in its full development with strophes eight or nine lines long. Side by side with it we find, as in Pindar, the strophic arrangement; here also the strophes are longer than hitherto. These changes in the direction of greater elaboration should be considered in connexion with the musical reforms of Lasus, and the statement of the Scholiast on Pindar that the 'originator' of the dancing-chorus was Arion of Methymna (at Corinth), who was followed (seventy years later) by Lasus.

TIMOCREON

In default of the self-revelation of monodic poetry, the basis of our estimate of Simonides naturally includes the stories that gathered round his name.

Many of these record wise sayings, some of which are proverbs still: 'Fortune favours the brave,' 'Painting is silent Poetry,' 'Play all your life and never be entirely in earnest.' On the other hand, there are references even as early as Aristophanes to his penuriousness; and Pindar was supposed to hint at him where he says 'The Muse was no seeker of gain then, nor worked for hire,' and the ancient comment is 'He means that nowadays they compose victory-songs for pay, a custom begun by Simonides.' Pindar was probably referring to all contemporary poets including himself. It may be that the Eulogy, being complimentary of an individual, was the last form of poetry to be bought and sold, or that till the end of the 6th Century poets had lived by teaching the young, and regarded the composition of lyric poetry and the training of choruses as acts of grace.

In any case a dispassionate survey of all the external evidence suggests, not a niggard, but a man of independent disposition who was not content to live as a mere hanger-on of rich men, but believed the labourer to be worthy of his hire; and this is not inconsistent with the great kindly humorous soul that beams from the Danaë and the Epitaphs. Sappho was supreme in the solo-song, the personal lyric; Simonides was great because he took the choral lyric, the collective epitaph—the impersonal song, the song of the tribe—and made it, humanly speaking, personal.

Among the fragments of Simonides are certain after-dinner impromptus, which, like some of the dedicatory Inscriptions, show the marvellous technical ingenuity that comes of a life spent in handling words. The dinner-table was clearly the venue of his passage-at-arms with a man who, significantly of the period, combined the Lyric and Iambic poet with the Comedy-writer, and strangely enough was a five-event champion as well, TIMOCREON of Rhodes. By the irony of fate Timocreon owes the preservation of his most considerable extant fragment to his having attacked in it Simonides' friend Themistocles. It is a triadic poem, and therefore probably Choral, written in a much more pronounced Doric than that of the Attic 'choruses,' and was probably sung and danced, like Simonides' Victory-Song for Scopas, at a drinking-party. The Eulogy here masquerades as a lampoon.

Timocreon's poem in Ionic dimeters beginning 'Quoth a pretty man of Sicily to his mother,' and his monodic Drinking-song in Trochaic dimeters to the God of Riches, suggest that he is indebted, if not for form, at least for matter, to Alcaeus. He seems to have quoted an Iambic line of Anacreon's. Like Simonides, he also wrote Inscriptions. Of his Comedies, like Simonides' Tragedies, nothing is known except the statement of Suidas that he wrote them.

Another poet of this age who seems to have combined 'pure' lyric and the drama was Phrynichus, whose first tragic victory was in 511, and who is recorded by Timaeus as a writer of Paeans.<sup>1</sup> Thus in the first quarter of the 5th Century signs are already visible of a change in the history of Greek Melic. The lyric genius of Athens is soon to run in but two channels, the Dithyramb and the Drama.

Before we continue the account of Lyric at the new literary metropolis we have to speak of four poets, two Pan-Hellenic and two provincial, the latter, whom we shall take first, both wholly or in part Dorian, and both—a thing hardly to be expected in Ionian Athens—women. The noble figure of TELESILLA of Argos shines for us in the pages of Pausanias and Plutarch, but as a poet, or rather a prophet, turned warrior. Of her poetry we know hardly more than that, like another Dorian, Timocreon, she used the Doric dialect and sometimes the Ionic measure, and that she wrote what was perhaps a Partheneion to Artemis and probably a Hymn to Apollo.

CORINNA

accorded tenth place in the 'canon' of Greek Lyric Poets, there is fortunately more to say. Apart from her famous reproof of the young Pindar (above, p. 6), and his as famous but less courteous reference to her rusticity (above, p. 8), little is known of CORINNA beyond what may be gathered from the few extant fragments of her work. She was born at Tanagra; she perhaps lived part of her life at Thebes; she was five times victorious over Pindar; she took Pindar to task in a poem for using an Attic word; she wrote 'five Books, and Inscriptions, and Lyric Nomes.' She was moreover a pupil of an otherwise almost unknown lyric poetess Myrtis of Anthedon, who wrote at least one poem, known to Plutarch, on a local Tanagraean myth, resembling in subject the love-tales of Stesichorus and in general type the stories sung by Corinna herself.

To judge by her editor's orthography, which cannot be earlier than the 4th Century, the edition in which the Alexandrians apparently found Corinna's works was made long after her day. It throws light on the provincial, or should we say national, character of her work compared with Pindar's, that it was not 'metagrammatised' like his into the new Attic alphabet, but into its offshoot the new Boeotian. The edition was probably made by a Theban schoolmaster soon after the battle of Leuctra, when the national pride of the Boeotians ran high.

In the extant part of what appears to be the introductory poem to her Old-Wives' Tales, of which there were perhaps two or more Books, she sings 'for, or to, the white-robed daughters of Tanagra'; but whether this means that they were the performers as choruses of maidens or merely the audience which she chiefly had in view, is not clear. Her subjects seem to be mainly the local myths of Boeotia, often taken, as her title plainly tells, from the lips of the people, and told not without charm in a singularly plain and simple way nearer kin to the Fable than to the Epos. There is some small trace of personal poetry, but this may belong to the personal part of Choral works.

PINDAR

The dialect is the half-Aeolian Doric of Boeotia, the metre mainly perhaps Ionic Dimeters or Glyconics arranged in equal strophes of five or six lines, the latter admitting of resolution at the beginning. She wrote, we know, Lyric Nomes, the introductory parts of which were probably in Hexameters; but whether her other narrative poems also were Monodic is not certain. The separation of the Nomes perhaps suggests that they were not. Her Book of Inscriptions speaks for the wide vogue of the fashion which among the great poets seems to have begun with Sappho, if not with Archilochus.

Of the local Boeotian tradition to which Myrtis and Corinna seem to have belonged we have no other trace. Anthes, who hailed from Myrtis' birthplace, belongs to the Dark Age; the poetess Boco is of unknown date.

Corinna's greater pupil, PINDAR, whose poems lie beyond the scope of this book, must nevertheless find brief mention here. We are told that his flute-teacher, perhaps seeing dimly that the new Pan-Hellenism was centred, for poesy, in Athens, thither—it would be about the year 505—sent the young Theban to learn the lyre. Among his teachers was the great poet-musician Lasus. The lad returned to Thebes to be rebuked by Corinna for the neglect of 'myth' in his poems, and to lose to her five lyric contests; after which he lost patience with the provincial-minded judges and called his old instructress 'a Boeotian sow.'

His first datable Ode, Pythian x, was written in 498 when he was twenty years of age, his latest, Pythian viii, in 446 when he was seventy-two. He seems to have lived most of his life at Thebes, with occasional visits to the various places in Greek lands to which he was called to exercise his art of poet-musician and chorus-trainer. In the 'life' prefixed to his works by the Alexandrians who edited them we read: 'He wrote seventeen Books, I Hymns, II Paeans, III and IV Dithyrambs, V and VI Processionals, VII to IX Maiden-Songs, X and XI Hyporchemes or Dance-Songs, XII Eulogies, XIII Dirges, XIV to XVII Victory-Songs.' By this list we may measure our losses in Greek Choral Lyric; for, but for a few fragments, these last four Books are all of Pindar that we have.

With no complete Epinicion of Simonides to which we may compare Pindar's, we cannot tell how far the structure of his odes or his treatment of the myth<sup>1</sup> were new. But the outward and visible informality which embodies an inward and spiritual symmetry; the seemingly casual, yet never, we may believe, really abrupt, transitions which give to these works of consummate art the easy flow of an evening's intimate conversation; the light and landscape that is born of a single epithet; the vivid portrayal of action as by a painter whose strokes are firm and few; the dark metaphor doubtless made plain by the gestures of the dancers; the effect of playing with a story rather than telling it; the combining of a sublime detachment of outlook with the sympathy of one acquainted with grief—it is part of the Greece of that day that such things should be in a song of congratulation to an athlete, but some at least of them we may believe are Pindar's own.

Till a generation ago Pindar's Epinician Odes were the only complete examples we possessed of Greek Choral Melic outside the Drama. In 1896 the sands of Egypt gave us part of a papyrus-roll containing a number of Epinicia and Dithyrambs of his younger contemporary, the last of the Great Nine. BACCHYLIDES, like his mother's brother Simonides, was a native of Iulis in Ceos, where he was born about 510. Like Pindar he seems to have visited the houses of his patrons in various cities of Greece; he was apparently with his uncle at the court of Hiero at Syracuse; he spent part of his life in exile—probably for anti-democratic tendencies—in the Peloponnese; his first datable ode was written about 485, his latest in 452. A comparison of his 'output' with that of Simonides and Pindar indicates a similarity throughout; but we find no Dirges, and we do find Love-Songs. If the two elder poets wrote Erotica, they were included in their Eulogies. To Bacchylides, like

BACCHYLIDES

Pindar but unlike Simonides, were ascribed Processionals and Partheneia. But we must remember that these classifications owe much to Alexandria; and in any case it is clear that the themes of these three poets and the treatment of their themes were closely akin. Hence partly no doubt the rivalry between the two Ionians and the Aeolo-Dorian; hence also perhaps in some degree their excellence.

Yet we may believe they were far from equal. Before we had Bacchylides we knew 'Longinus', dictum :

'Bacchylides and Ion may be faultless, may have attained to complete mastery of the smooth or polished style, whereas there are times when Pindar and Sophocles carry all before them like a conflagration, though they often flicker down quite unaccountably and come to an unhappy fall; yet surely no man in his senses would rate all the plays of Ion put together at so high a figure as the Oedipus.'

And now for Bacchylides we can agree. Bacchylides' eagle, his ghosts beside Cocytus, his flowers of Victory around the altar of Zeus, are fine delicately conceived pieces of imaginative writing; but they do not bring water to the eyelid like Simonides' Thermopylae nor, like Pindar's three-word apocalypses, stir thoughts too deep for tears. Our mind's eye may delight in Bacchylides, our heart goes out to Simonides. Bacchylides' material was the same as Pindar's, but his treatment of it, as far as we can judge, much less original. His myths, both in style and structure, bear a closer kinship to the Epos, or rather perhaps to the Lyre-Sung Nome that had long taken its place in narrative song. His tale has more of the novel than Pindar's and less of the short story. He is more concerned with the facts of a victory than with its meaning. With him gnomic commonplace is not transmuted into prophetic utterance. He is more of the professional song-writer who entertains, less of the inspired prophet who needs must teach. He might (almost) have written some of the 4th Pythian; he could never have written the 5th. The reader feels somehow that Bacchylides' charms are embroidered on his theme, while Pindar's are inwoven in it. His beauty is of the earth, Pindar's of the waters under the earth. 'Man is the dream of a shadow'; for all his power as a narrator, Bacchylides could not have written that.

Before we continue our story it will be convenient to give some account of the various kinds of Melic poetry. Of the history of the HYMN down to the days of Terpander we have spoken already.

In Roman times Hymns were classified as εὐκτικοί 'of prayer,' ἀπευκτικοί 'of deprecation,' κλητικοί 'of invocation,' ἀποπεμπτικοί 'of valediction.' The first would correspond with Simonides' Book of κατευχαί or Prayers. The last, of which the ancients had examples in Bacchylides, would be used for instance at Delphi when Apollo withdrew for his winter sojourn in the land of the Hyperboreans. The Cletic Hymn is exemplified by opening lines addressed to Aphrodite by Alcman and Sappho, and one or other of the types in the fragments of the Hymns to Hermes and Athena by Alcaeus; in a perhaps complete Hymn to Artemis by Anacreon; in the beginning of Lasus' Hymn to Demeter; in a paraphrase of what were probably the first six stanzas of Alcaeus' Hymn to Apollo; and some fragments of the Hymns of Bacchylides and Pindar. Sappho's Ode to Aphrodite, like Anacreon's to Dionysus, is apparently an adaptation of the Hymn to the purposes of a Love-Song or Love-Message. These few instances, none of which, except the two Love-Songs, is necessarily to be considered monodic, are sufficient to give some idea of the Hymn of the early classical period. Catullus' Hymn to Diana; Horace's Carmen Saeculare and some of the Odes, for instance those to Mercury (i. 10), to Venus (i. 30), to Diana (iii. 22); and the Hymns of Tragedy and Comedy, for instance the beautiful invocation to the Clouds in the play of Aristophanes; will help to fill out the picture. The earliest extant non-hexameter fragment of a Hymn is a line from one to Demeter included in the Ἰόβακχοι of Archilochus. The connexion of these Hymns with the Homeric Hymns is marked by the use of the word Proem for the Homeric Hymn to Apollo by Thucydides,

THE PROSODION

and for Alcaeus' Hymn to Apollo by Pausanias. To judge by the fragments which seem to come from Simonides' Hymn to Poseidon, the Hymn was later elaborated to include myths of some length, in this case that of the Argonauts. Towards the end of the classical period we hear of Hymns by Timotheus, one of which, at any rate, was monodic. Long before this the Hymn, almost alone of classical Choral Melic, had thrown off the dance. The Hymns of classical times were generally sung at a sacrifice, by a chorus standing round the altar of the God. There is, naturally, no trace of the Triad, and, again perhaps naturally, there seems to have been no characteristic rhythm. In post-classical times the Hymns were frequently performed by children of both sexes. The early parallel of Olen's Hymn to Eileithyia suggests that this may have been common in the classical period. Bacchylides calls Hymns παιδικοί, though the actual form of the word is suspect.<sup>1</sup>

The PROCESSIONAL or Prosodion, of which we have two lines of an early example composed by Eumelus for a chorus of Messenians to sing at Delos, seems to have been a sort of Hymn-in-motion sung as the dancing chorus approached the temple of the God.

The author of the passage in the Theogony (68) describing the progress of the Muses to Olympus, was doubtless, as we have seen, familiar with the Prosodion (see p. 622). Like the standing Hymn, it included a petition. Eumelus speaks of himself as an innovator. The ascription of the invention of this form to Clonas probably marks a later resuscitation involving the supersession of the lyre-accompaniment by that of the flute. The metre was at first, as it seems, the Hexameter; later the characteristic rhythm was the Prosodiac — — — — — (—), probably a folk-rhythm forerunner of the Anapaestic, as the 'Half-hexameter' found in one of Sappho's Wedding-Songs and in proverbs may have been one of the ancestors of the Hexameter. It is found in the Embaterion or Song of the Battle-Charge of the Spartans sometimes ascribed to Tyrtaeus. The revival of this rhythm for use in the Prosodion was perhaps due to Clonas. Processionals formed two Books of Pindar's works and at least one of Bacchylides'. Pindar's longest extant fragment opens with an address to Delos. A song sung in the Prosodiac metre in honour of the Spartan general Lysander has the Paeanic refrain and is called a paean by Duris (p. 470).

THE PAEAN

The PAEAN was apparently a development of a probably non-Hellenic cry, ἡπαιάων, used to invoke a healing and averting deity who came, after Homer's day, to be identified in various parts of Greece with various Gods and Heroes; chiefly with Apollo, though even Pindar's Book of Paeans contained, we are told, songs addressed to all the Gods.

The Paean was sung at the beginning of any important undertaking, such as a voyage, for instance the Athenian Expedition to Sicily, or a battle—this was post-Homeric—for instance that of Salamis;<sup>1</sup> in the worship of Apollo as a special type of song or song-dance of prayer or thanksgiving, sometimes processional or performed at various points where a procession temporarily stopped, always after the libations which followed a sacrifice, taking in some cases the place of the Hymn; among the customs of the feast—originally identical with the sacrifice—as a particular sort of hymn or prayer after the threefold libation which bore the same relation to the ensuing drinking-bout as the sacrifice to the just-completed feast; after victory, for instance that of Salamis, when Sophocles played the lyre and led the dance of naked youths, as a song of thanksgiving and triumph at the setting up of the trophy or as the returning troops marched in. With the last use went, naturally enough as time went on, the notion of praise of the victorious general, for instance the Anapaestic, or Prosodiac, and therefore probably Processional, Paean sung to Lysander at Samos, and the competitive Paean performed to Antigonus and Demetrius at Athens. Side by side with these more formal uses was the use of the refrain as a mere shout of joy, as it were Hurrah, especially for victory in battle. Eventually there seems to have arisen some confusion between the Paean and the Prosodion, and even the Hymn. In Aristophanes' Thesmophoriazusae (311) the refrain of the Paean is used as a sort of Amen to the Hymn-prayer. The introduction of the Paeon at Sparta was ascribed to Thaletas, who was said to have brought it from Crete, when summoned to stay the plague. The Cretan connexion is also marked by the Homeric Hymn to the Pythian Apollo (c. 600 B.C.). The rhythm of the oldest form of the refrain, coupled with the name of the foot known as the Great Paeon, points to the original metre having been composed of groups of five long syllables. This is perhaps the best way of scanning the 'Hymn' Ζεῦ πάντων ἀρχά ascribed to Terpander. But the extant Paeans show no surviving trace of this rhythm and but few traces of its sister the ordinary Paeon — — — (or — — — —), both possible descendants of an old stress-foot of five beats (see p. 627 above). It is possibly not without significance that the 'new-Lesbian' Melic shows the clearest traces of old stress-conditions, that Archilochus calls the Paeon 'Lesbian,' that the refrain bears a resemblance to the name of the Paeōnians, and that Orpheus' head was carried, in the tale, by the Hebrus to the shores of Lesbos. The Paeon of public ritual accompanied all the sacrifices at Delphi except those offered during the three months' winter-absence of Apollo, when its place was taken by the Dithyramb. It was sung by women at Delos, by youths at Thebes; at the Spartan Gymnopaediae it was performed by naked youths in honour of those who fell at Thyrea in 546. From about the year 460, when the cult of Asclepius was introduced at Athens, it became the custom to sing Paeans there, in which Asclepius was probably associated with Apollo, on the eve of the Greater Dionysia. We have fragments or mentions of Paeans by Stesichorus, Tynnichus, Simonides, Pindar, Diagoras, Bacchylides, Sophocles, Socrates, Ariphron, Timotheus; and a considerable number belonging to the late 4th Century and after, some of them complete, are preserved in inscriptions. The two 'hymns' with musical notation found at Delphi, which are composed in Paeons and Cretics, may possibly be Paeans. That the later Paeon did not always contain the refrain is clear from the ancient controversy over Aristotle's Ode to Virtue (p. 410).

The Symposiac or Dinner-table Paeon was the everyday counterpart of the festal Paeon at private dinner-parties, at club-feasts, at the common table of certain Dorian communities, and the like. References to it are found as early as Alcman. Among the Athenians—and the customs of other peoples were probably very similar—the wine was mixed in three bowls, from each of which the first ladleful was poured on the ground to Olympian Zeus, the Heroes, and Zeus the Saviour; and then the whole company, every man holding a laurel twig, sang the Paeon. If a fresh bowl was required, it was sung again. And sometimes there was yet another singing of it, to end the evening's festivity; this last Paeon was sung by the host alone. The flute, the instrument proper to a sacrifice, was the usual accompaniment, played by a hired flute-girl. These dining-paeans were addressed primarily to Apollo, but like their greater counterparts they came to associate with him other deities such as Poseidon, or quasi-deities such as Health or Virtue. The Paeans chosen were mostly perhaps 'classics'; we hear of those of Stesichorus, of Tynnichus,<sup>1</sup> of Pindar. The other songs of the feast, Drinking-songs, Eulogies, were secular; the Paeon, like the English 'grace,' was sacred. The Paeon was generally Choral, the secular songs generally Monodic.<sup>2</sup>

The traditional contents of a Paeon seem to have been first an invocation, then something of the nature of a 'myth' with occasional reference to present-day topics, and finally a prayer. During the reign of the Hexameter, that metre seems to have been employed. A survival of this use is perhaps to be seen in the Hexameters that appear in the Paeon-like ode in the Oedipus Tyrannus (151 ff.). Later, as in the other kinds of Melic, the older rhythms resumed their sway. The refrain either divided the couplets or strophes, which, to judge by Aristophanes' song in the Wasps (863 ff.), sometimes extended to half the whole poem, or made part of their last line or lines. In the latter case we find it in certain of Pindar's Paeans elaborated into a short sentence, sometimes recurrent as in ii, sometimes not, as in vi. In three of the four extant triadic Paeans of Pindar, the refrain or refrain-sentence ends the Triad, and it may have done so in the fourth (Ox. Pap. 1791). Better evidence for the structural evolution of Choral Melic could hardly be wished for (see p. 621). In the Alexandrian period, like other forms of Melic poetry, the Paeon tended to drop its isostrophic arrangement; and the refrain, if it occurs, is apt to occur capriciously. The instrument of the public or Festal Paeon was at first, as was to be expected, the lyre, and later flute and lyre, or even, notably in the Processional Paeon, the flute alone. The accompaniment of the Symposiac Paeon, as we have seen, was given by the flute.

The Paeans both Festal and Symposiac were turned to secular use before the end of the 4th Century. The Encomium or EULOGY was the result of a similar but far earlier change.

Among its early ancestors we should doubtless reckon the Homeric 'renowns of men.' Its connexion with the feast—originally a sacrificial feast—shows that like all ancient customs it was once part of a rite; and just as the narrative Epic seems to have budded off from the Hymn, it may well be that the Eulogy was an offshoot of the Symposiac Paeon. But the name 'the song in the κῶμος' points to a more immediate derivation from the revel with which the symposium ended. Indeed Pindar more than once uses the word κῶμος in the sense of ἐγκώμιον. Apart from Homer, the earliest extant example is Alcaeus' monodic ἐπαίνησις, as the Lesbians seem to have called it, to his brother returned from the wars. The new triadic fragment of Ibycus, if Eulogy it be, shows the type fully developed as a form of Choral Melic, an elaborate secular song-dance performed in honour of an individual at a feast. Such a development could at first only be expected under the conditions which produce court-poets. In the hands of Simonides, at any rate, the Choral Eulogy became established as one of the great types of Greek Melic. We have a considerable fragment of a poem in seven-line strophes addressed to the Thessalian prince Scopas, which, beginning with the rhythm called Encomiologic, — — — — — — — — — —, is probably an Encomium. In it the poet speaks up in his own person for the man whose character is 'not too good for human nature's daily food.' Of the Eulogies of Bacchylides we have two incomplete examples, one to Alexander son of Amyntas, king of Macedon, and the other to Hiero of Syracuse (Ox. Pap. 1361). Both are composed in short recurrent strophes; both begin with a reference to the βάρβιτος; both refer to the symposia at which they were performed;

THE ENCOMIUM

both may be Monodic. The better preserved of the two, in which the Encomiologic metre predominates, sings of the pleasing effects of the wine-cup; the other, which is written in kindred rhythms, mentions an Olympian victory. A more mutilated part of the same papyrus would seem to indicate that Bacchylides' Encomia sometimes contained a myth. We have mention of two Eulogies of Diagoras, one of a Mantinean, the other of Mantinea. This Eulogy of a state was doubtless performed, like Pindar's xith 'Nemean,' of which presently, at a city-banquet in the town-hall. The Eulogies of Pindar formed his xiith Book, from which we have three considerable fragments. By a lucky chance we have also one complete Encomium included—apparently because it mentions local victories in wrestling—in the Nemean Epinicia. Of these four poems, two are strophic and two triadic; one begins with the Encomiologic, one has it—with additions—at the end, and all are in kindred rhythms. 'Nemean' xi was sung and danced in praise of Aristagoras of Tenedos after a public sacrifice and feast on the occasion of his becoming president of his city's council. It begins with an address to Hestia, whose sacred fire was kept burning in the town-hall; wishes that Aristagoras may win favour by his year of office; congratulates his father on him, and himself on his 'splendid body'; hints—by way of averting the Nemesis that came, and still comes, of over-praise<sup>1</sup>—that despite his beauty, wealth, and athletic prowess he is nevertheless mortal; yet adds that it is good that 'we' his fellow-citizens should tell his praise. Then comes the reminder that he has won sixteen victories in the wrestling-match among neighbouring peoples, and the assurance that he would have been victorious at Pytho and Olympia had his too diffident parents only thought fit to allow him to compete there. Next, after a moralising 'transition' to the effect that some men are 'cast out from good things' by boasting, others by mistrusting their strength, follows a reference to his heroic ancestry; then more moralising, on the heredity of virtues, how one generation will have them and another not, for that it is destiny that leads men on; Zeus gives us no clear sign of the future, <sup>1</sup> this precaution, a commonplace in Pindar, has its echo in the modern Greek custom of averting the evil eye by spitting in the face of a person whom you have praised

yet hope drives us to embark on high designs; we should therefore pursue advantage moderately, 'for fiercest is the madness that comes of desires unattainable.' The word ἐγκώμιον came to be used of any song of praise addressed to an individual, for instance Simonides' Dirge On those who fell at Thermopylae; and the type eventually evolved both 'Epic' Eulogies, which presumably were recited, and prose panegyrics. The extension of the term to other forms of Melic was really a reversion; for it was the songs of the κῶμος that were in all probability the forbears of the Victory-Song, the Drinking-Song, and the Serenade and other Love-Songs.

Indeed the distinction between a Eulogy and an Epinicion or VICTORY-SONG was probably first drawn at Alexandria. In any case, what difference there was came of the accident that the 5th-Century Greek honoured commons as well as kings, and the victor in the Games, whatever his rank, became a man of the highest distinction.

A prototype of the Victory-Song is Archilochus' so-called 'Hymn' of Victory to Heracles, celebrating his own success in the competitive hymn to Demeter (see p. 606). In those days a poet could sing of his own prowess—if he remembered to 'ascribe all to God'—for instance in the 'seal' of a Nome or Partheneion; but it was probably some generations yet before the true Encomium became an art-form, and perhaps another generation before it evolved the Epinicion proper. We have fragments of Victory-songs by Simonides dating from the last decade of the 6th Century; the earliest of Pindar's forty-three was written in 498. Thanks to the preservation of Pindar's Epinicia and some of those of Bacchylides, discussions of the form, contents, and occasions of this type of choral song-dance are easily available elsewhere.<sup>1</sup> Here it is enough to remind the reader that after the year 573, of every four years the first saw an Olympic Festival in July or August, the third a Pythian in August, the second and fourth an Isthmian in the Spring and a Nemean in July; and there were a very great number of lesser festivals of a similar kind. At all these the athletic 'events' aroused the widest interest, but we should remember that Pindar celebrates a Pythian victory in the

THE LOVE-SONG

Flute-Nome. The enumeration of these competitions is a syllabus of ancient education, and the catalogue of the known poems which celebrated them a hymn to the spirit of Greece.

Another variety of the 'Song-in-the-κῶμος' was the Eroticon or LOVE-SONG.

This may be said to have had its prototypes, if not in the Hymns to Love ascribed to the early bards and sung at the Eleusinian Festival (see p. 594), in the Love-Elegies of Archilochus and Mimnermus—which were probably recited rhythmically to the flute—and in the ribald songs of another Ionian, Polymnastus. But Chamaeleon ascribed the first Love-Songs to Alcman. It is significant that Alcaeus begs his beloved to 'receive your serenader (κωμάζοντα),' that is κῶμος-singer. When the symposium broke up, the guests went merrily through the streets and lovers sought their loves. This rout was called κῶμος. Whether the Love-Song was sung at the table like other Eulogies, or at the door of the beloved, depended on circumstances. If the beloved was of the opposite sex, the latter would more probably be the occasion. In the hands of Sappho and Alcaeus, the masters of Monody, the Eroticon quickly reached its zenith. Ibycus, with his half-Dorian origin, was perhaps the first to make it, as a court-poet might, like any other Encomium a choral song-dance,<sup>1</sup> though it is not likely that all his Love-Songs were Choral. The Ionian Anacreon, truer to human nature, more consistently followed, we may believe, the great Lesbians. The connexion of the Love-Song with the Eulogy is marked by Pindar's Encomium to Theoxenus of Tenedos, the beautiful youth in whose lap the aged poet is said to have died. This, which consists of a single Triad, was probably sung and danced by a chorus after a feast. In spite of the personal form of its expression it has a strangely impersonal, almost unworldly, ring, suited not only to the formality of its performance, but to the character and, we may believe, the age, of its author.

Another and at first doubtless identical offshoot, as it would seem, of the Symposiac Paeon, was the Scolion or DRINKING-SONG. Here again classification apparently derives from a circumstantial and once fortuitous distinction.

THE DRINKING-SONG

The term Scolion apparently came to be used of the post-Paeanic song if it was sung while the drinking went on, the term Encomium if it was sung when it was over—or nearly over. The exact moment when the κῶμος could be said to have begun was often doubtless as imaginary as the Equator, and thus the term Encomium was often used of a song sung at the table. Hence the seeming confusion in what, even if it was editorially useful, was a fundamentally arbitrary classification. It is to be noted that the Argument to Pindar mentions a Book of Encomia but not of Scolia, though Athenaeus cites his 125th fragment from the 'Scolion to Hiero'; and that Aristotle classes as an Encomium the Harmodius-Song, which may nevertheless be taken as typical of the Attic Scolia, a collection which no doubt formed part of the library of every Athenian lyrist-schoolmaster in the mid-5th Century. We shall speak of this presently. The earliest Drinking-Songs were ascribed, perhaps wrongly, to the Lesbian Terpander. In any case it is clear that they came up as art-forms about the middle of the 7th Century, and their budding in Alcaeus and their flowering in Alcæus suggest an Aeolian, perhaps once part-Lylian, stock.

Alcaeus uses the Scolion not only as a pure Drinking-Song, but as a Political Song, to rally nobles against commons, to attack the tyrants; as a War-Song, to inspire his countrymen in the Athenian and Erythraean wars; and, inevitably in such a man and in such a quarter of the Greek world, as a Love-song. Aristotle quotes an attack on Pittacus as from the Drinking-Songs, and yet Alexandria seems to have put the Scolia in one Book and the Stasiotica in another. The distinction would probably have puzzled Alcaeus himself. They were all Songs of the Table. The invective element came, if you will, from Archilochus, the erotic from Mimnermus, the warlike from Tyrtaeus. But in the hands of Alcaeus the invective becomes public instead of private, the erotic active instead of passive, and the warlike personal instead of tribal. This development was due partly to the man, and partly, as we have seen, to the hour. Sappho's Table-Songs were sometimes political, but more often, we may believe, songs of love and friendship. She, too, however, was a good hater, and it is clear that she sometimes attacked her rivals, if not to their faces, at least in a company of sympathisers who would pass the song on. Like their imitator Horace, both Lesbians seem, as has been said above, to have used the song as a letter. Most of Anacreon's songs of satire, of love and wine, of regret for past youth, are clearly Melic and Monodic Table-Songs or Iambic (or Trochaic) recitations to the lyre. Even in the court-poet the political motif is not always absent.

Lesbian influence is clear too in the book of Attic Scolia, whose preservation we owe to Athenaeus. Here we find political or national songs referring to the struggles of the nobles against the Peisistratids, celebrating the tyrannicides, recalling the Persian Wars; songs lauding Athena, Demeter and Persephone, Apollo and Artemis, Pan; or gnomic (moralising) songs on friendship and good company—all these in the characteristic four-line 'hendecasyllabic' stanza; an 'Alcaic' strophe on the theme 'Look before you leap,' and a partly Glyconic fable of the Crab and the Snake, both perhaps from Alcaeus; and a number of couplets mostly gnomic in subject and in Choriambic metres, some taken from Praxilla. The book perhaps included the dystrophic War-Song of Hybrias the Cretan. With the exception of this last and Callistratus' Harmodius-Song, which has four isorhythmic strophes, they are all of but one stanza. The repetitions in the Harmodius-Song (ll. 1-2 = ll. 9-10, ll. 3-4 = ll. 15-16) are probably a characteristic feature, to be connected in the history of folk-song with the competitive 'capping' in certain forms of Bucolic poetry. Compare the quotation-capping scene between Bdelycleon and Philocleon in the Knights.

There is no doubt that improvisation took part in the creation of many of these Drinking-Songs. A change in the fashion of these things is indicated by a passage which is also valuable as showing us how these songs were sung at Athens, Aristophanes Clouds 1353 ff., which is here given in Rogers' translation :

Strepsiades. Well from the very first I will the whole contention show :

'Twas when I went into the house to feast him, as you know,
I bade him bring his lyre and sing, the supper to adorn,
Some lay of old Simonides, as, how the Ram was shorn :
But he replied, to sing at meals was coarse and obsolete;
Like some old beldame humming airs the while she grinds the wheat.

Pheidippides. And should you not be thrashed who told your son from food abstaining

THE HYPORCHEME

Str. You hear him ! So he said just now or e'er high words began :

And next he called Simonides a very sorry man.

And when I heard him I could scarce my rising wrath command ;

Yet so I did and him I bid take myrtle in his hand

And chant <sup>1</sup> some lines from Aeschylus, but he replied with ire,

' Believe me I'm not one of those who Aeschylus admire,

That rough, unpolished, turgid bard, that mouther of bombast ! '

When he said this, my heart began to heave extremely fast ;

Yet still I kept my passion down, and said ' Then prithee you,

And he began <sup>3</sup> the shameful tale <sup>4</sup> Euripides has told

How a brother and a sister lived incestuous lives of old.

Then, then I could no more restrain, etc.

The Drinking-Song was evidently an alternative to the ῥῆσις or ' speech ' from Tragedy, and it was the host's part to decide what form the entertainment should take. The myrtle-branch (perhaps commemorative of the tyrannicides) or a spray of laurel (connected probably with Apollo and the Paean) was passed from hand to hand as the guests took turns at recitation. When singing was the order of the day, the place of this branch was taken by the lyre with which the singer accompanied his song. As all the guests could not be expected, as a rule, to be able or willing to sing, the lyre's course round the company was often somewhat ' crooked ' ; hence, in contrast with the regular course of the branch, the proceeding, and after it the song itself, was called σκόλιον.<sup>5</sup> The entertainment was sometimes varied by all the guests singing together, for instance the stanza Ὑγιαίνειν μὲν ἄριστον ἀνδρὶ θνητῷ ; but such were probably merely Monodic songs, as it were, multiplied, and did not involve the dancing which was characteristic, we may believe, of most Choral Melic.

A form of Choral Melic in which the dance predominated over the song was the HYPORCHEME.

This, once probably the ritual dance of the Curetes, was said to have been introduced from Crete by Thaletas, and to have been the accompaniment proper to the ἐνοπλος ὄρχησις or Pyrrhic, which at first—always at Sparta—was a dance-at-arms, later a mimetic dance of more general type associated at Athens with Dionysus. But it was probably not confined to this use, being more generally a dance of many accompanying a dance of few, the few being silent and more mimetic than the many who sang. Its characteristic metre was the Cretic (— —), though this does not predominate in the longer extant fragments and the names of certain metres, for instance the hyporchematic prosodiac — — — — — | — — — — —, point to a great widening of the metrical scheme. We have mention of Hyporchemes by Xenodamus, Pindar, Bacchylides, Pratinas. The three most considerable fragments, once given to Simonides (vol. ii, p. 330), are now generally ascribed to Pindar. These, like the large fragment of Pratinas on the over-importance given to the flute, are probably characteristic in the rapid motion of their rhythm and the liveliness of their subject-matter. As would be expected, the ‘mode’ employed was the Dorian. There is no trace of strophic or triadic arrangement. We are told that both sexes took part. According to what is perhaps a late authority, the Hyporcheme was performed by a chorus who ran round the altar while the sacrifice was burning. This, which does not seem consistent with the other evidence, may have been a late development. Athenaeus compares the Hyporcheme with the Cordax of Comedy by reason of its sportive character. It was employed in Tragedy, for instance by Sophocles Phil. 391 ff., and is perhaps to be recognized in Comedy, for instance at the end of the Ecclesiiazusae.

<sup>5</sup> Martin sees a sign of the Aeolic pedigree in the accentuation, but this is regular in an oxytone adjective which became a noun, cf. δόλιχος

THE HYPORCHEME

Some of the songs of Greece, naturally, such as the Mill-Song and the Spinning-Song, never came upon the stage of art; others, such as the Reaping-Song, only in the book-form of Alexandrian Bucolic (Theocr. 10. 41 ff.); some, such as the Iobacchus, made art, as it would seem, by Archilochus, were superseded by other similar forms; others were indeed brought into art-poetry in Lesbos, but seem to have had no vogue elsewhere in the classical period. The Adoneion or ADONIS-SONG and the Epithalamium or WEDDING-SONG, both connected with cults which made their chief appeal to women—whence probably their lack of vogue in the Greece of the classical period—became art-song in the hands of Alcman<sup>1</sup> and Sappho.

As we have seen, the 'Sapphic' stanza probably owes something to the people's Adonis-Song; and there are several fragments of Sappho which clearly come from her Adonideia, of the composition of which she seems to speak in a new and doubtfully restored fragment. One of these fragments, which is in a Choriambic metre, belongs to an Amoebeic song between a chorus of maidens and their leader who personates Cytherea—an interesting parallel to the early Dithyramb, itself the work of a Lesbian, Arion. Adonideia are also ascribed to the Dorian poetess Praxilla of Sicyon. In the Alexandrian period, when women's natural position in civilised life comes again to be reflected in the treatment of love in literature, we have Bion's hexameter Lament for Adonis and Theocritus' book-representation of the song sung on the previous day of the festival to celebrate the marriage of Adonis and Aphrodite.<sup>2</sup>

The same period saw a revival of the Epithalamium. The hymeneal folk-songs, of which the refrain was ᾠὴ ὑμῶν ὑμέναιε or the like, were apparently of several classes: the song of the marriage sacrifice and feast, the song of the wedding-procession,<sup>3</sup> the songs at the door of the bridal chamber before and after the nuptial night; but some of these may have been late developments. The procession-song only is mentioned in Homer, where it is clearly a song-dance. Theocritus' Epithalamy of Helen, which we are told owed something to the Helen of Stesichorus, and seems to show an acquaintance with the ixth Book of Sappho, is supposed to be danced by maidens before the chamber during the night. Sappho's 65th fragment ends with a reference to the coming dawn. The Helen of Theocritus begins with banter of the bridegroom, quickly passes to praise of the bride's beauty and her skill as spinner and weaver and as player of the lyre—this makes

<sup>2</sup> xv. 100 ff.; the song itself contains (137 ff.) a forecast of the dirge to be sung on the morrow

THE DIRGE

the chief part of the song—, and after a climax consisting of a promise to choose a tree to be called and worshipped as Helen's, ends a farewell to the happy pair with the line which, as well as the topics of the song, may be traditional. Part of one earlier example (Sa. 66), if it was written for a real wedding and is not a mere tale in song, a Lyric Nome like those of Stesichorus, is remarkable as containing (or being in the form of) a myth. With one exception which is open to the same doubt (146), all the other fragments of Sappho's ixth Book appear to be concerned with the present. To judge by some of them, the bride herself took part in an Amoebeic song with the bridesmaids: and here, as in Theocritus, we find banter, but not only of the bridegroom. The lines on the doorkeeper are composed in a sort of ‘Half-hexameter,’ like the meshymnic<sup>1</sup> fragment (148) but with the first two ‘shorts’ of any length. Sappho indeed seems to have employed various metres for this kind of song, including, like her imitators Catullus and Theocritus, the traditional art-form, the Hexameter. Her ‘Half-hexameters’ and her Glyconics—and with the latter we may compare Catullus’ other Epithalamy and the metre of the wedding-refrain—probably, as we have seen, came from popular forms. The Wedding-Song naturally appears sometimes in Attic Drama, for instance at the end of Aristophanes’ Peace and in the Trojan Women of Euripides. We also hear of a Wedding-Song by Philoxenus, which was perhaps exceptional for the time. Telestes’ Hymenaeus was a Dithyramb.

The Homeric form of the Threnos or DIRGE has already been described. Its chief occasion was the laying-out of the corpse, but in Athens, at any rate, it was probably sung also on the thirtieth day after the burial and repeated at the anniversary of death. The existence of a traditional Flute-Nome called Epitymbidian or Over-the-Grave; the derivation of Elegy, sung to the flute, from the lament; and the practice in 5th-Century Athens of making a prose laudation over the dead, point to its having been performed sometimes at the actual burial. Two, at any rate, of the popular forms which stand behind the Dirge are the Ialemos and the

THE DIRGE

Linus, both having their echoes in Attic drama, the former for instance in Aeschylus Supplikes 113 ff. and Euripides Phoenissae 1034 ff., and the latter in Aeschylus Agamemnon 121 ff., Sophocles Ajax 626. The traditional metre of the Ἰάλεμος was perhaps — — — — — | — — — — — for this rhythm occurs in both the above passages and corresponds in part with the word itself, doubtless once a refrain. The Linus refrain was Dactylic, αἶλινον αἶλινον; which is derived from the Semitic and once meant 'woe for us!' Both these forms were said to have come from Asia, and both refrains, being non-Hellenic and therefore unintelligible, gave rise to myths in which Ialemus and Linus were persons. The Linus-Song in Homer has been already dealt with on p. 586. There was some confusion in the later antiquity between the Θρήνος and the Ἐπικήδειον. The Epikedeion was perhaps once an alternative term which came later to be used for the Elegiac Lament in particular; the adjective ἐπικήδειος occurs first in Euripides. As with so many other forms of Melic poetry, we have indications of the use of Hexameters in the first art-stage. We may compare Euripides Andromache 103 ff., where an Elegiac Lament by Andromache herself is followed by a Choral Ode in which the Hexameter is mixed with 'Half-pentameters' as well as with Iambic and Trochaic lines reminiscent of the Ialemus. Compare also the Helen 164 ff. The Elegy of Andromache is doubtless closely akin both to the 'Epigram' or Inscription commemorative of the dead, and to the Ἐπιτάφιος Λόγος or Public Funeral Oration delivered over fallen warriors at Athens at least as early as the beginning of the 5th Century. Bion's Lament for Adonis is entitled ἐπιτάφιος; here we find the amoebeic and refrain elements of the old popular Dirge, of which the former survived in the κομμοί of Attic drama.

PRAYER-SONG: GRAPE-BEARING SONG

he did the inscriptional Epitaph, to the highest point of excellence, equalled, but not surpassed, by a poet whose thoughts were deeper but not wider, of whose Dirges we have several considerable fragments. In one of these Pindar describes the life of the departed, in the other he seemingly embodies the Orphic doctrine of reincarnation. We know, too, that Pindar wrote a Dirge for Hippocrates, brother of the great Athenian Cleisthenes, who probably died about 486. The instrument of the Dirge, naturally, considering its connexion with the Elegy, was the flute.

Apart from the Dithyramb and the Nome, which are reserved for a later page, we find in the catalogue of Proclus, which is based on Didymus, four more kinds of Melic, Partheneia, Daphnephorica, Oschophorica, and PRAYER-SONGS.

The last, εὐκτικά, are probably a late subdivision of the Hymn, of which we see a trace in one of the Alexandrian titles of Simonides' Books, κατευχαί. They apparently differed from the Hymn in accentuating the element of petition, but they did not eschew the myth. Simonides' Sea-Fight off Artemisium was, it would seem, a Prayer-Song performed in obedience to the oracle which bade Athens ask aid of the son-in-law of Erechtheus, that is Boreas, and perpetuated, if we may interpret Himerius, in the Panathenaic procession.

The Athenian OSCHOPHORICON was a form of Processional song-dance performed just before the vintage by twenty youths chosen two from each tribe. These traditionally represented the young Athenians rescued by Theseus from the Minotaur; but the rite clearly was a conflation, for besides Theseus and Ariadne, it did honour to Dionysus and Athena Sciras, the latter the protectress of the olive. The two principal dancers, who were dressed as maidens in memory of the ruse by which Theseus increased the proportion of males to females in the human tribute of Athens to Cnossus, carried grape-hung vine-branches; women who represented the mothers of the intended victims carried in the procession baskets of food like that with which they had furnished them for their voyage; and the ceremony, besides the bearing of the vine-branches (ῥσχοι) from the temple of Dionysus at Athens to that of Athena Sciras at Phalerum, included races among the choristers, and on their return to Athens funeral rites commemorating the death of Aegeus, and a banquet. The songs were probably of a two-fold nature alternating grief for the death of the father with joy for the triumph of the son.

LAUREL BEARING SONG

Of the DAPHNEPHORICA or Laurel-bearing Songs, which were composed by Alcman, Alcaeus, and Simonides, and of which Pindar's works contained three Books, we now have an incomplete example written by the Theban poet for the Daphnephoria held every eight years in his native city in honour of Apollo Ismenius.

The procession, said to be commemorative of an ancient victory over the Oetaeans, consisted of a chorus of branch-bearing maidens led by the priest of the year, a handsome boy of noble birth, called the Daphnephorus, who, with his unbound hair crowned with a golden diadem and wearing a long and richly-embroidered vestment and a special kind of shoes, followed his nearest kinsman of either sex, the actual 'bearer,' with his hand upon the laurel. This 'laurel' was an olive-branch bound with bay and flowers, which was surmounted by a globe of copper from which depended a number of smaller globes, and had tied to its middle another small globe to which were fastened purple ribbons, its lower end being wrapped in a piece of yellow cloth. The explanation given was that the upper globe and its dependants represented the sun, the planets, and the stars, the lower the moon, and the ribbons, which were 365 in number, the days of the year. Similar rites were observed at Athens and elsewhere, notably at Delphi, whither every eight years a chorus of children, led by a child Daphnephorus personating Apollo, brought laurel-branches by a traditional route from Tempe, in commemoration, it was said, of Apollo's return from his journey thither to purify himself after slaying the Serpent. Pindar's extant Daphnephoricon is written in Triads of fifteen short lines. His Daphnephorus' father Pagondas, whose own father Aeoladas is the real inspirer of the poem, commanded the Thebans when they defeated the Athenians at Delium long afterwards. The girls of the chorus sing of the occasion; of themselves and their dress; of the Daphnephorus and the honours his family has won in the Games, with some reference to Theban politics; but the myth, if there was one, is not extant.

THE PARTHENEION

The poem is really a special kind of PARTHENEION, showing a family resemblance to the partly extant Maiden-Song of Alcman.

We are told that Pindar's Partheneia were almost exceptional among his works as displaying less of the 'archaic and austere style' otherwise characteristic of him.<sup>1</sup> It may be, if we may judge by the remains of Alcman's, that the difference lay in a lighter tone, though this is hardly borne out by the fragments. The Partheneion was a sort of Processional song-dance allied to the Hymn, but still containing the secular elements of which the Hymn seems, as we have seen, to have divested itself by a process of budding-off, and always, as the name implies, sung by maidens. Of Alcman's work in this kind we have already spoken on p. 615. Here it is enough to add that in the hands of its 'inventor' it is clearly characterised in its personal part by a merry badinage between teacher and taught,<sup>2</sup> sometimes delivered in the poet's own person, sometimes in his choir's, which speaks for the happy relations between them, and throws a pleasing light on the position of women in Dorian communities. We hear of Maiden-Songs by Simonides and Bacchylides; we have a few fragments of Pindar's three Books and a few lines which may come from Partheneia by Telesilla and Corinna; and in a recently restored papyrus, a passage from the hitherto unknown Book of these songs by Anacreon. This new fragment is important because it shows that of the Choral songs sung by women the Maiden-Song, at any rate, was not confined to the Dorians and Aeolians.

It is now time to resume our story, which broke off at the end of the 'Canon' of the Lyric Poets. Though local competitions both in song and in the games still went on all over Greece,<sup>3</sup> sometimes, as at Syracuse, attaining more than local importance, most of the greater poetical and musical talent of the 5th and 4th Centuries appears to have been absorbed by the Dionysiac contests at Athens. The Dithyramb seems to have been a comparatively late importation ; yet it in all probability existed, in origin the commemorative, once invocatory, rite of a dead hero, through many generations of folk-custom, and with many local modifications, before it came upon the stage of art.

According to Aristotle its origin lay in Phrygia. The word Διθύραμβος is an epithet of Dionysus in Pindar and Euripides. The singer of iambi was himself called ἴαμβος. We clearly cannot separate in origin διθύραμβος, ἴαμβος, θρίαμβος, and the Latin triumphus, translated θρίαμβος by the later Greeks. As with παῖδν, itself probably non-Hellenic,<sup>1</sup> the ritual epithet used as a refrain came to be the name of the song itself. It may well prove to be Lydian.<sup>2</sup>

The earliest instance of the Dithyramb among the Ionians is the fragment of Archilochus, 'I know how to lead the dithyramb-song of lord Dionysus with my senses lightning-struck with wine.' Among the Dorians we find the very ancient<sup>3</sup> invocation sung by the Elean women, where Dionysus is at once a hero and a bull but not yet a God, and where—which marks an older stage than the lines of Archilochus—there is as yet no mention of wine. As this is essentially a Hymn, the Dithyramb would seem to have been an early offshoot of the ghost-invocation which in primitive communities would be indistinguishable from a rite of commemoration. The separation would only become obvious when the commemorative element came to predominate. The word of Archilochus, 'to lead,' ἐξάγει, is used by Homer of the two tumblers who lead the dance of youths and maidens, in the Shield of Achilles. We are told by the Scholiast on the Frogs, where Dionysus in distress says 'Call the God,' that at the Lenaeon festival the torchbearer says 'Call ye the God,' and those who reply to him cry, 'Semelean Iacchus, giver of wealth.' This Amoebeic element, which has its parallel in Sappho's Adonis-Songs and Epithalamies, was probably a very ancient feature of the Dithyramb; but the Elean Hymn suggests that it was not original. It survives in the Theseus of Bacchylides. According to Aristotle, Tragedy derived from the 'leaders of the Dithyramb,' and it is therefore significant that question-and-answer should be so marked a feature both of the Melic and non-Melic parts of Attic Drama.

The theme of the old folk-Dithyramb seems to have been the adventures of Dionysus; but its extension to other heroes began early in its history at Sicyon, where according to Herodotus the adventures (πάθρα) of Adrastus, one of the Seven before Thebes, were celebrated with tragic dances (τραγικοῖσι χοροῖσι), 'in which they honoured Adrastus instead of Dionysus'; and this is spoken of as the immemorial custom of the city down to 580. At Athens, as we shall see, the extension to other heroes came later. Whatever its origin, the Dithyramb seems to have developed before the historical period into the song-dance of the worshippers, of whom one personated the God and the rest Satyrs or goat-men, to the sound of the flute around the altar at Dionysus at the sacrifice of a bull, the song probably from the first competitive and the bull's carcase the prize. At Delphi Dithyrambes to Dionysus were performed in the three winter months, Paean to Apollo during the rest of the year. At Athens the performance of the Dithyramb belonged traditionally to the early spring and was connected with the Anthesteria, a sort of Feast of All Souls. From very early times the cult of Dionysus seems to have been associated with that of Apollo at Delos; it is worth noting that Simonides' Dithyrambes were preserved in the Delian temple archives.

The raising of this old ritual song-dance to the sphere of art was connected by the ancients with the name of the Lesbian Arion, who is said to have flourished at the court of Periander of Corinth about 625; to have been a pupil of Aleman; and to have been victorious at the Carneian Festival at Sparta. According to Suidas' authority he 'invented the tragic style, was the first to assemble a chorus (χορὸν στῆσαι), to sing a Dithyramb, to give that name to the song of the chorus, and to introduce Satyrs speaking in metre.' According to Aristotle, also, the originator of the Dithyramb was Arion, 'the first trainer of the Cyclic Chorus (κύκλιος χορός).' In these two passages we seem to have the beginnings, that is the raising to art-status, and possibly the differentiation, of the Dithyramb, of Tragedy, and of the Satyric Drama. If this is so, the reference of Archilochus, who lived 50 years before Arion, would seem to be to the folk-ritual. But perhaps it is unsafe for us, though the ancients did it, to draw a hard and fast line between the 'folk'-stage of development and the stage of 'art.' When we draw it, at any rate, and it is often convenient to do so, let us remember that changes of this sort generally come more gradually than their historians suppose; and that the classification 'folk' and 'art' is, at bottom, unscientific. The distinction, for any particular place or time, depends on circumstances, and the winding river of culture often parts into more than two streams.

THE EARLIER DITHYRAMB

It should be noted that Archilochus was a poet and speaks of himself as 'leading' the Dithyramb, and ὁ ἐξάρχων the Dithyrambic poet remained in name throughout the classical period. The leader's part would naturally fall to a man of superior powers, in this case doubtless powers of reproducing and improvising song-dance, especially if, as it seems to have been, the performance was a matter of question and answer; for it takes more intelligence to put an impromptu question than to answer it.

After Arion, the next great name in the history of the Dithyramb is that of the Argive Lasus (see p. 638). The Argive musicians seem to have been famous at the end of the 7th Century, when Cleisthenes of Sicyon ejected them to make room for native performers. When we are told that Lasus was the first to make the Dithyramb competitive we should probably understand this to mean competitive as an art-form at Athens. He and Simonides, with the early dramatists such as Choerilus, Phrynichus, Chionides, and perhaps Thespis, were probably prime actors in the art-movement which began under the Peisistratids and continued under the democracy. All the various types, the Dithyramb proper, its offshoots Tragedy and the Satyr play, and later, Comedy, the child of the rustic vintage and harvest rites associated with the reproductive forces in nature and man, were performed at the Greater Dionysia, some at other festivals. The first recorded victory 'with a chorus of men,' which probably means in the Dithyramb, that of Hypodicus of Chalcis in 508, is thought to mark the beginning of the intertribal competitions which were intended to help in the welding of the new democracy. Private citizens, acting in two categories, as boys and as men, now superseded the guilds of singers; the professional element did not reassert itself till the over-elaboration of music made it imperative in the 4th Century. It is recorded that Simonides was victorious in the Dithyramb in 476, Pindar in 474.

In other parts of Greece about the year 500 we find Dithyrambs being composed by Praxilla of Sicyon, and there is some trace of the art-Dithyramb before this in Magna Graecia, though the claim that most of the poems of Stesichorus were Dithyrambs is not to be regarded as proved. They were more probably Lyre-Sung Nomes.

In 5th-Century Athens the change in the subject-matter of the Dithyramb was resented by the conservative element in the people, and 'What has this to do with Dionysus?' became a proverb for irrelevance. The only considerable fragment of the Dithyrambs of Pindar, which filled two Books, deals with Dionysus; but the only two of Simonides' Dithyrambs of which we know the names were called Memnon and Europa; and of the five complete extant Dithyrambs of Bacchylides the Io is the only one that mentions him, and that only just at the end.<sup>1</sup> Both Pindar's fragment and the Io were written for the Athenians. Pindar tells us that the Dithyramb originated at Corinth, and this seems to have been the scene of the labours of Arion. In the same passage Pindar calls it 'ox-driving' (βοηλάτης), that is, for which the prize is an ox. The Scholiast on Plato tells us that the winning poet received an ox, the second a jar, presumably of wine, and the third a goat which was led away anointed with wine-lees. Athenaeus tells us that the winning Athenian tribe received a tripod. This tripod was dedicated in the Street of Tripods with an inscription recording the archonship, the poet, the fluteplayer, and the choragus or rich citizen who had paid for the training and equipment of the chorus. The fluteplayer stood on the steps of the altar, and the chorus danced round it. The chorus was of fifty men in the time of Simonides, later sometimes of more, and was called circular probably in contrast at first with the quadrangular processional song-dances such as the Partheneia and the Prosodia, and later with the similar formation which became usual in the Drama. The musical mode employed was at first, as was to be expected, the Phrygian. The structure of a Dithyramb in the best period was sometimes strophic, sometimes triadic.

<sup>1</sup> it is not necessary to suppose that the classing of these as Dithyrambs is merely Alexandrian; apart from the evidence of the proverb, the 'absence' of Dionysus was a natural development and has its parallel in the history of the Paean

THE LATER DITHYRAMB

We have evidence of the authorship of Dithyrambs at this time for Ibycus, Lasus, Simonides, Lamprocles, Pindar, and Bacchylides. Of the five complete extant Dithyrambs of Bacchylides the subjects are 'The Asking-back of Helen, Heracles and the Shirt of Nessus, Theseus' Voyage to Crete, Theseus' First Coming to Athens, The Wanderings of Io. Of these the Voyage of Theseus was performed in honour of Apollo at Delos by a chorus of Ceans, the Heracles in honour of Apollo at Delphi; the First Coming of Theseus is clearly for the Athenians; the Io is definitely stated to be for the Athenians; the fragmentary Idas is for the Lacedaemonians.

With the growing importance of music in Melic performances, against which Pratinas of Phlius protested in vain (p. 660 above), and to which we have references in Aristophanes (Nub. 970), came a still completer separation of the Dithyramb from the Drama. The Drama became less and less a matter of song and dance, and the Dithyramb more and more a matter of instrumental music.

We may realise this by comparing the proportions of Melic to other matter in Aeschylus and Euripides. The accompaniment of the Dithyramb now included the lyre, and the dancing of the Dithyrambic chorus was greatly elaborated. The music-and-dancing element once strong in both Drama and Dithyramb was now concentrated in the Dithyramb, and the verbal element once equally important in both was now concentrated in the Drama. Not that the verbal element disappeared from the Dithyramb, but the over-elaboration of the dancing and the music caused degeneration in the style of the words and a loss of form in the metre. The strophic arrangement disappeared; all the 'modes' were used in the same poem; the words became a turgid jumble of disjointed sentences full of wildly-compounded epithets.

Soon the performance became too much for the citizen-choruses, and professionalism resumed its sway. The comic poets and Plato protested in vain. The truth is that all the Dionysiac performances, including the Drama, suffered the degeneration which waits on art-forms when they begin to appeal only to the pleasure of the looker-on. This degeneration, to judge by modern parallels, would be hastened by the disastrous Peloponnesian War.

In the latter half of the 5th Century the chief name is that of MELANIPPIDES, grandson of the earlier Melanippides; at the end of the 5th and the beginning of the 4th those of PHILOXENUS of Cythera, his pupil, and Timotheus of Miletus.

Melanippides introduced instrumental flute-preludes and free rhythms—that is, astrophic arrangement—, Philoxenus solo-songs.<sup>1</sup> Aristodemus nevertheless, in conversation with Socrates, is made by Xenophon to place Melanippides with Homer, Sophocles, Polyeleitus, and Zeuxis, as a master of his art. Philoxenus enjoyed a great reputation both at Athens, and, later, at the court of Dionysius at Syracuse. His famous Dithyramb The Cyclops, in which he satirised the tyrant, who had crossed him in love, was imitated by Theocritus. The large fragment of the Banquet which, clever though it is, shows the Dithyramb at its worst, is probably the work of another Philoxenus.

Of the eighteen famous Dithyrambs of his contemporary TIMOTHEUS<sup>2</sup> we have but one line from the Scylla. He raised the number of the strings of the lyre to eleven, and made other bold musical innovations which, after a period of great unpopularity, eventually combined with his success with the Lyre-Sung Nome—of which presently—to make him the most famous poet of his day. For his Hymn to Artemis the Ephesians paid him a thousand gold pieces. The after-influence of Philoxenus and Timotheus may be gauged by the fact that two hundred years after their death their Nomes were still taught to the young Arcadians (Polyb. 4. 20. 9). There is one more famous name, that of TELESTES of Selinus, who won his first victory in the Dithyramb in 402.

THE LYRE-SUNG NOME

We have a considerable fragment of his Argo, in which he speaks up for the use of the flute, possibly in reply to Melanippides' Marsyas, which dealt with the contest between flute and lyre.

Towards the end of this period the ever-growing desire for mere entertainment caused a revival of interest in an old but not obsolete <sup>1</sup> form, the Lyre-Sung Nome. This revival was due to the Lesbian Phrynīs, who won his first Athenian victory in 446, and his pupil Timotheus of Miletus, who lived at Athens and was a friend of Euripides, and died at a great age in 357.

This ancient song was accompanied by a dancing, and sometimes in the earlier period singing (Plut. Mus. 8, Procl. Chrest. 320a. 33), chorus, to the tune, traditionally, of the lyre; but even in the time of Terpander the lyre was supported in a subordinate position by the flute. When the share of the chorus came to be confined habitually to the dancing, the song was left a Lyric Monody with orchestric accompaniment, a type which had the advantage over other Choric song that the words could be heard more easily by the audience. That this was felt to be a real advantage to it as an entertainment is clear not only from the way in which Epic, Iambic and Elegiac all became recitation-verse, but from the passage of the Frogs where Aristophanes takes credit to himself for supplying his audience with books of the words for the coming contest between Aeschylus and Euripides.<sup>2</sup> It is no coincidence that the same period in the history of Melic poetry saw Philoxenus' introduction of solos into the Dithyramb.

To judge by the large fragment of Timotheus' Persae, the style of the 'new' Nome, despite the distinction drawn by Proclus,<sup>3</sup> differed little from that of the later Dithyramb, with which indeed it was probably intended to compete for popular favour. The Persae is directed, in its 'seal' or personal part, the part in which the author

<sup>1</sup> the 'Boeotian' Nome was still performed at Athens in 426, Ar. Ach. 13 ff.      <sup>2</sup> there, of course, it is the spoken, not the sung, word that they wished to be able to follow, but the inference to the attitude of the late-5th-Century playgoer at Athens is clear; see also p. 633      <sup>3</sup> below, p. 676

PRELUDE AND NOME

as it were signed his name,<sup>1</sup> against the conservatism of the now dominant Spartans in matters of music and poetry. We may well believe that this justification of the poet to his judges in the competition would have been unnecessary had they been Athenians. Degeneration had gone further at Athens than at Sparta.

There seem to have been extant at this time certain Lyre-Sung Nomes ascribed to Terpander. These probably are the ten ᾠδαί mentioned by Timotheus. The derivation of νόμος in this connexion is not quite certain. This use of the word is first found in the Hymn to the Delian Apollo. The ancient explanation that it meant 'regular' because the composer was not allowed to go beyond the proper technical limits will not hold water; for the frequent change of mode and rhythm (in the same song) with which this explanation would contrast it, was, as we know from Plato, a late development. Now the Nomes of Terpander were coupled with, but different from, his προοίμια or Preludes; it is clear from Suidas that these were preludes to the Nomes; and when Plutarch wants to prove his derivation of νόμος he says: 'As soon as the performer had done his duty by the Gods, he passed on to the poetry of Homer and other poets—which is proved by the Preludes of Terpander.' This would seem to imply that Terpander's Preludes, like some of the Homeric Hymns, contained some reference to their having originally been followed by Epic Lays. Was it the custom that Prelude should be followed by Nome and Nome by Epic Lay?

Before it means law νόμος means custom. It is conceivable therefore that νόμος in this connexion means the usual, if not the legally constituted, song, the prescribed part, the ritual and once unvaried part, of the performance;<sup>2</sup> and thus first, when the Hymn broke in two and the Epic became a separate thing, the alternative terms νόμος and προοίμιον (still sometimes called ὕμνος) were left standing alone without the Lay the contrast with which had given them birth; the second stage was the dividing of the νόμος into the προοίμιον νόμου and the main body of the νόμος; but the two together were still sometimes spoken of as a προοίμιον, and Terpander's Preludes in this sense contained some reference, as Plutarch implies, to their being followed by Epic Lays—as indeed, according to Heracleides, they originally were. The ascription to Timotheus of a Book of Προνόμια or Preludes to Nomes seems to indicate the late use of a more distinctive name for the προοίμιον νόμου. The Flute-Sung Nome 'invented' by Clonas may well have begun as an occasional substitute for the Lyre-Sung. Of the two purely instrumental Nomes both were probably developments of the few bars which preceded the ancient Hymn by way of giving the singers their pitch, the lyre again coming first in point of time.

THE NOMES OF TERPANDER

Of the Lyre-Sung Preludes of the first stage, when they were identical with the Nome, and also of the Preludes of the second stage when they formed introductions to it, we may well have examples among the Homeric Hymns; but they were probably not all composed in hexameters after the days of Terpander. One of the Nomes ascribed to him was called The Trochaic, and he is praised by Plutarch for introducing into music a beautiful style called Terpendrean. It is clear that he not only added a string to the lyre but was a rhythmical innovator as well. That one of his Nomes was called Trochaic suggests that hitherto the metre of such songs had been something else—in all probability the Hexameter. The 'Terpendrean' metre was likely enough the Spondaic, exemplified in at least one extant fragment, that of a poem which was ascribed to him in antiquity and was presumably one of the famous Nomes—possibly the Nome called Terpendrean; for it might have been called after the metre rather than the composer, which would explain why among so many Nomes ascribed to Terpander only one bore his name.<sup>1</sup>

We have corroboration of the view that the Nome was a derivative of the Hymn, in the first fragment of Terpander, where we find, in what is probably the beginning of the Nome called Terpendrean, the poet referring to the first part of his poem as a 'beginning of Hymns.' In Pindar Nem. 2. 1, 'Where too the Homerid bards of stitched epic lines for the most part begin, namely the prelude to Zeus,' the reference is to the rhapsodes, and the προοίμιον is probably a short Hexameter address such as the xxiiiird Homeric Hymn. Whether this Zeus-Prelude of Terpander's would be suitable to a Nome sung in competition at Delphi or at the Spartan Carneia, both held in honour of Apollo, is not quite certain. It may have been performed elsewhere; but it should be noted that the poetical custom of 'beginning with Zeus'—though not perhaps as old as the Theogony, where ll. 47 ff. come awkwardly and may well be an addition—is as old as Pindar. Timotheus' Persae, which was probably written for a festival of Poseidon, ends with an address to Apollo. The contents of Terpander's Nomes can only be conjectured from the incomplete Persae of his imitator, and from a general comparison with the Homeric Hymns.

<sup>1</sup> the view that τροχαῖος in this connexion refers to the tempo—'running'—and not the rhythm, is less likely; cf. also Stob. Ecl. i. l. 31, where after an enumeration of deities in 9 hexameters we read ὑμνέωμες μάκαρας, Μοῦσαι Διὸς ἔκγονοι, ἀφθίτοις ἀοιδαῖς, which, though it can hardly be earlier than the 4th Century, may follow an old tradition

Among the earlier poets of the Nome, besides Terpander, Lyric Nomes were ascribed before him to Chrysothemis and Philammon, to the latter of whom were sometimes attributed certain of the Nomes generally called Terpander's; Arion's 'Preludes to Epic Poems,' of which there were two Books, were probably Lyric Nomes; so too perhaps were some at least of the long narrative poems of Stesichorus, which he himself calls Preludes, and of Ibycus, who was sometimes credited with the Funeral Games of Pelias; Lyric Nomes were ascribed by Suidas' authority to Corinna.

In the latter half of the 5th Century comes Phrynis, whose innovations, according to Proclus' authority, were 'the combination of the Hexameter with free rhythms and the use of a lyre of more than seven strings.' Next to him his pupil Timotheus, who 'brought the Nome to its present condition.' Then follows a comparison with the Dithyramb: 'The Dithyramb is full of movement and, expressing by means of the dance a high degree of "possession" or excitement, is directed to evoking the emotions most characteristic of the God; wild, too, in its rhythms, it nevertheless employs a simple phraseology. The Nome on the other hand is sustained <sup>1</sup> in an orderly and highly dignified style by the various characters it describes; while its rhythms are easy and tranquil, it employs compound expressions. Each of course has its particular "modes," the Dithyramb the Phrygian and Hypophrygian, the Nome the Lydian system of the singers to the lyre.' Here Proclus' authority clearly was speaking, if not of the Dithyramb before Melanippides and of the Nome before Phrynīs, at any rate of both before the worst results of their innovations had worked themselves out.

In the Clouds (423 B.C.) Aristophanes bewails the change of taste which had made such songs as those of Lamprocles out of date; in the first Book of the Republic (c. 385) Plato makes the aged Cephalus quote Pindar as an old man in a modern novel might cite Tennyson; in his comedy Linus, Alexis (372-270) makes the bard bid his pupil Heracles select a book from his library in the following lines :

'Come here and take whatever book you please;
Look carefully at the titles; take your time;
Here's Orpheus, Hesiod, and the Tragedies,
Choerilus, Homer, Epicharmus, prose
Of every sort and kind; your choice will show
What manner of man you are.'

No mention of Iambic, Elegiac, or Lyric poetry. It is clear that by the end of the 4th Century, when playwrights were already writing plays merely to be read, much even of the verse which had long been only recited had lost its attraction, and song-poetry, at any rate the older song, was going out of fashion. Theophrastus' Late-Learner (319 B.C.), instead of learning the 'classics,' is at pains to get by heart the songs he hears at the juggler's show. In a fragment of Aristotle quoted by Athenaeus (i. 6 d) we read : 'They spend the whole day holding forth to chance audiences at the puppet-shows or to travellers just arrived from Phasis or the Borysthenes, though they have never read anything but Philoxenus' Banquet, and indeed have never finished that.' Here we may well have a glimpse of the half-literary public who thumbed the earlier Greek story-books of which we have somewhat late examples in the fragment of the

THE ROMAN TWILIGHT

Tale of Ninus, a papyrus which may belong to the last Century before Christ, and the famous Milesian Tales collected by one Aristides and translated into Latin in the time of Sulla. The Song of the Table survived—chiefly among hired musicians—through the Alexandrian Age; Sappho and the Anacreontea were still sung—by professionals—after banquets in the 2nd Century of our era. There was a long twilight, but the sun had set.<sup>1</sup>

By the end of the Athenian Period, that is by about 330 B.C., which has been taken as the limit of this book, most of the forms of Greek poetry, including the Drama, by the process of budding-off which began, it would seem, with the early Hymn, appear to have developed secular uses: for the honouring of men rather than Gods; for the imparting of general moral truths; for the expression of personal love, hate, grief, joy; for mere record or communication; for sheer entertainment. In Melic poetry the hieratic tradition went on into Roman times, to give birth eventually to the Christian Hymn;<sup>2</sup> the secular forms, narrowing in scope of occasion and choice of metre, and growing ever more a means to pleasure, survived the last centuries B.C., mostly perhaps as recitation-poems. The change was partly due no doubt to changing economic conditions, but partly also to the ever-increasing rift between the dialect of literature and the idiom of common life, and not least to the gradual supersession of the pitch-accent. Stress was resuming its sway, and poetry sung in 'longs' and 'shorts' was naturally felt to be too artificial when the 'quantities' were coming to be ignored in speech. Another cause, which began to work even in the days of Euripides, was doubtless the spread of two corrupting practices which came of the over-elaboration of the musical accompaniment, the singing of several notes to a single syllable and the neglect of the pitch-accent in composing the melody. So long as these practices were the exception no harm was done, but when they became the rule, the words became less important than the music because less easily intelligible to the ear, poetry was less often sung for its own sake, and even Monodic art-song eventually appealed to few but the highly educated in music.

The general standard of the literary taste that prevailed among the educated Greeks of the Roman Empire is shown—for song—by our possession of the Anacreontea beside our loss of Anacreon. Some of the Anacreontea, which date from about B.C. 150 to A.D. 550, show signs of attempts to adapt the old Lyric metres to the new language-conditions; Bishop Synesius, who lived about 400 A.D., knew the Lyric Poets and wrote 'Anacreontic' Hymns; in the 7th Century it was still worth the while of a certain Egyptian Greek, who was not a good metrician, to copy out the Fifth Book of Sappho; recitation-poetry, Epic, Elegiac, and Iambic, with certain modifications, were still written in the 6th and 7th Centuries; the Epigram indeed lived on till the 10th, Iambic to the 12th. But after that the dark.

'I was told when a boy,' writes Petrus Alecyonius in the 16th Century, 'by Demetrius Chalcondyles, that the priests of the Greek Church had such influence with the Byzantine Emperors that they burnt at their request a large number of the works of the old Greek poets, particularly those which dealt with the passions, obscenities, and follies of lovers, and thus perished the plays of Menander, Diphilus, Apollodorus, and Alexis, and the poems of Sappho, Erinna, Anacreon, Mimnermus, Bion, Aleman, and Alcaeus.'
